FRIVOLOUS SOCIETY OR THE CLOISTER?

How Miss Margarita Drexel, the Great Philadelphia Heiress, Whose Heart Beckons Her to a Nunnery, is Being Lured by All Her Friends to Live the Life of a Worldly Society Beauty.

Miss Margarita Drexel.

HOW all worldly-minded young women must envy Miss Margarita Drexel, prettiest, richest, most accomplished, most sought after of all the debutantes upon whom British royalty and all the brilliant throng that surrounds the Court of St. James's are smiling during this brilliant London social season.

Almost straight from her long seclusion in a French convent school, really beautiful, the daintiest little person imaginable, with quiet, shy, unaffected manners, and as fresh and charming as a wild flower, she has been presented to the King and Queen of England, and is the very centre of attraction where titled bachelors most congregate.

Indeed, princes and peers are already fluttering about her—rich suitors, thinking only of her beauty, charm of manner and accomplishments, and poor ones who long ago committed to memory the fact that she is daughter and heiress of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Drexel, of the multi-millionaire New York, Philadelphia, London and Paris banking family.

Yet, more interesting, more startling than all this, is the whisper that little Miss Drexel cares nothing at all for all these social triumphs; that the thought of leading the frivolous life of a fashionable beauty appals her; that she has given her heart to her religion and longs to spend her whole life in the divine service as a veiled nun in a cloister.

What to her are the courts of earthly kings? She is fitted to move easily and gracefully through the ceremonials which royalty exacts, to take part in which is the dearest ambition of so many young girls; but she finds no triumphs in them. Those scenes leave her cold and more than ever drawn to meditations in her chamber, which is more than half oratory.

In the fashionable world on both sides of the Atlantic this whisper has been heard. It causes all sorts of comments. Some say that the girl, like many others convent bred and of a serious nature, is passing through a period of religious exaltation which will not long outlast her introduction to the gay world. Others are not so confident, remembering that a daughter of her father's brother dedicated the whole of her fortune of $7,000,000 to church work, took the veil, and became Mother Superior of a Catholic order created by herself.

This was Katherine A. Drexel, daughter of Francis, eldest of the three Drexel brothers, himself intensely religious. To the Church ever since she has been known as "Mother Mary Katherine, head and founder of the Order of the Blessed Sacrament." In this way, for more than a dozen years, she has devoted herself and her fortune to the education of Indians in the West and negroes in the South.

How would such an example in her own family impress a young girl, herself naturally religious and serious-minded, dwelling in the serene, devotional atmosphere of a convent school? Would she not shrink from the thought of a life of worldliness, and find her wealth another argument in favor of her duty to give all to religion.

Such whispers undoubtedly add a piquant flavor to the visible charms of little Miss Drexel, from the standpoint of those in the gay London whirl who are suitors for her hand in marriage. And when they observe how expertly and successfully Mrs. Drexel pilots her daughter into the most fashionable of society harbors, probably they are not very much alarmed at the convent idea.

When little Miss Margarita had finished her course at the convent school Mrs. Drexel placed her under the best masters in Paris for the finishing touch to accomplishments necessary to a society belle. Mrs. Drexel, herself a highly accomplished woman, personally superintended her daughter's instruction in music—particularly singing—painting, the French language and literature.

She also took Miss Margarita regularly to one of the oldest convents in the St. Germain quarter, near the Church of St. Clothilde, for lessons in deportment from a nun of the ancient house of Duchâtel. Finally the girl was deemed fitted for admission to that exclusive Paris circle where her mother has long been welcome.

Beautiful, accomplished, elegant, yet charmingly shy, and

MORE than 500,000 men and women are injured or killed in the industries annually in the United States, or one person every minute.

This industrial carnage costs the people of the country, directly and indirectly, over two and a half billions of dollars—a sum larger than the national debt.

Such are the death tolls of industrial progress, which shows such a smiling face to those whose occupations involve no danger, but turns a ghastly countenance on those who work in peril of their lives.

Whoever doubts these figures need only read the grim statistics to be convinced that modern industry is more fateful than war.

In the Japanese-Russian war a total of 333,786 men were killed and wounded on both sides, not counting the losses in naval battles.

In the same period in the United States alone the great army of American laborers engaged in manufacturing and building operations suffered a loss of 425,000 killed and injured; 92,000 more lives were sacrificed to industrial progress in one year than during the greatest conflict of recent times.

Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that 84,155 people were injured and 10,046 killed on the railroads during the year ending June 30, 1904. Sufficient data has been accumulated by the United States Government and other responsible authorities to show that at least 5,100 men are annually killed or injured in anthracite mining alone, and 425,000 in factory and building operations, making the grand total approximately 525,000.

These estimates are conservative. If the exact number of accidents was known this total would be greatly increased.

In converting facts into figures Mr. Clarence Marx, who, with other responsible investigators, has given several years of study to the relation of crippled and unemployed persons to industry, presents a startling array.

Of the 525,000 workers mentioned 15 per cent only are killed, leaving 85 per cent, or 445,000, to struggle against their handicaps. Estimating that at least 50 per cent or 222,000 of these are able to earn $225 each annually, which is 50 per cent of the annual average earnings of able-bodied artisans, we have a total of $49,150,000. This is the loss in earning power.

Safely assuming that these persons would create twice as much wealth as they earn we would have a loss in production of approximately one hundred million dollars annually.

But this is only half the truth. If these 222,000 wageearners are not re-established they must sooner or later be supported by the State. It is also evident that the other 222,000 who are totally disabled will also become a burden on the taxpayers.

Poor relief statistics show that it costs $10,000 to support a pauper during his natural life time. To be conservative again, let us estimate this cost at $6,000, to make allowance for those who may be supported by relatives and friends, or who may become partially self-supporting. Since under our present system the partially disabled are not re-established, the total number, minus a small percentage, must be supported at public expense. To do this costs approximately two and one-half billion dollars. In other words, we contract each year to meet a debt of two and a half billion dollars within the lifetime of the persons thus injured.

These are staggering figures, but they are only a forecast of what we may expect if this wasteful destruction of life and limb continues.

In New York State, according to the estimate of the State Labor Commissioner in 1906, 44 workers in every 1,000 are incapacitated in the course of the year's work. That means, for instance, that at least 40,000 purely industrial accidents occur in New York City alone every year. The ratio of injured to uninjured is not as high in some other parts of the country, or the total number of accidents in the United States would be over 800,000 annually.

In one section of New York City, the Borough of Manhattan, there were last year 2,160 deaths by violence; astonishing as it may seem nearly one-third of these deaths, or 684, were caused by falls, explosions, caving in of earth, premature blasts and falling rock. The river tunnels were constructed at the cost of 68 lives, 43 in the Pennsylvania terminal works, 29 in the Belmont tunnel, 2 in the Subway borings and 3 in the Hudson companies' terminal.

In the huge, smoky workshop called Pittsburg, one human life is sacrificed for every 50,000 tons of coal that are shipped out of the city. For each 7,600 tons of steel products one of the manipulators, somewhere in the process of manufacture, lays down his life; and for each 70,000 tons of steel rails another laborer makes the last sacrifice.

Of the 2,660 deaths reported in Pittsburg in 1906, 919 were due to accidents in mills, mines and on railroads. The number of accidents was not computed, but it was undoubtedly in the thousands.

How does it al happen, you ask? If a huge ladle of white hot steel is upset, the molten stream burns alive its writhing victim. It may be that a man or woman is whirled to a horrible death in mill machinery; or a miner is blown to eternity in an explosion of damp in a mine. Travelling cranes, that manipulate their huge bulk as gracefully as does a society decades has developed a class of special trades that are peculiarly dangerous to life and limb. Publicity is given to accidents on railroads, but little is heard of the thousands annually killed and maimed in manufacturing and building and in some of the more obscure trades.

It has been shown that 425,000 are annually disabled in factories and construction work. But we have no means of knowing how many are industrially displaced by inhaling the poisonous fumes in working over batteries, or the large numbers that are afflicted with mercurial poisoning and other ailments in the hat industry and allied trades. Neither do we know how many succumb to painters' colic, or blood poison by working with brass and copper.

The victims of tuberculosis among sweatshop workers, grain trimmers, longshoremen, coat hands and others are shown to be numerous by the Board of Health reports, but the exact numbers have never been gathered into statistical form.

This loss of life and limb in times of peace would be sufficiently appalling in itself were there no tributary evils. But the situation is rendered even more serious by the fact that only about fifteen per cent of the industrial accidents result in the death of the victims, while eighty-five per cent, or 445,000, are doomed to a one-sided battle for existence.

When a man loses a limb or the use of it, is rendered partially blind by an accident, or in countless ways is incapacitated for his regular work, the first great question confronting him is to fit himself for some other form of labor. What are his chances to regain a foothold?

It is generally understood that few employers will engage a man who is not up to the best physical standard, no matter what other qualifications he may possess. This supposition is correct, but only because sufficient attention has not been given to the man physically handicapped, whose claim upon the right to live is often overlooked.

Some few corporations retain on the payroll those employes who may have been injured in their service, but the number of such is small. A few provide pensions, and even fewer have instituted some form of benefit that will be a real help in case of disablement.

But the great mass of injured persons must readjust themselves as best they can.

The chief reason why they fail to do this and start on the long tortuous road to semipauperism and finally the almshouse is the open prejudice of employers against hiring a cripple, or a failure on their part to recognize the fact that he still possesses an economic value, as he usually does. This remorseless prejudice against which many an honest and capable man has been forced to contend had driven valuable material to the waste heap of humanity, if not to a self-made grave.

There are many positions filled by boys and girls who should be in school which could be better filled by older men and women unable to command higher wages because of physical disability. To supplant the incumbents of such positions would be to raise the standards of education and of living, for if the children were not available their disabled seniors would take their places at a higher rate of wages though at less than current standards.

This would do much to remove the stigma of a present national disgrace by which 1,267,324 boys and girls between the ages of fourteen and sixteen years are allowed to dwarf their young lives in our shops, factories and mills. The handicapped man would supplant children only where a distinct economic and educational advantage is to be gained. He is fully competent to compete with the able bodied for many positions. It is not favoritism that he needs or asks; only an opportunity to demonstrate his fitness. The trouble is, he is rarely given that opportunity.

A crying need of the day is an awakening of the national conscience regarding the needless loss of human life and the resulting economic waste. In our reckless haste to make money we forget that in so doing ,the unnatural wear and tear of industry, and the fierce struggle for existence are producing an increasing host of dependent citizens, who have been worn out as a part of a machine and are then thrown on the industrial scrap heap.

Thte hours of labor are being slightly reduced and wages slightly increased, but the wear and tear on man and machine has been nearly doubled.

Many men, each one a unit of labor, valuable to the employer and to society, drop out crippled by accident or with their health undermined. Unless the employes are speedily able to readjust themselves in gainful occupations ,they become public charges. Each man added to the list of the State's dependents makes an added burden of taxes on the wealth producing citizens.

The employer, who is the exponent of the industrial system is accountable for this waste of productive power, though not the originator of it, is himself one of the first victims to feel the extra burden of taxation. Doubtless he is also appealed to, and subscribes liberally for private charitable schemes, which are themselves largely necessary evils. Hence the wasteful system of industry, in which the waste of labor is lost sight of in the mad attempt to save cost of production, reacts on itself; and the hard-pressed employer becomes a victim to the very system that is slowly but certainly adding to the cost of maintenance and production by increasing the value of labor, which he has tried to maintain, if not to cheapen.

Where is the remedy? If the present industrial system cannot be abolished, it may be controlled. If the wear and tear must continue, it may proceed with less friction and waste. Legislation on this point is becoming more stringent, and employers themselves are aiding in the effort to avoid need- of life and limb.

This problem can be solved only by sorting out the injured and readjusting them to other forms of labor. As employers more fully appreciate the great financial loss of life and limb, as they now so carefully guard the waste of raw material and so assiduously convert by-products into profit, the half million now annually forced into idleness and non-productivity will be re-established on a self-supporting basis.

Have you ever wondered what becomes of this vast army of injured wealth producers, how they readjust themselves and what is their ultimate fate? A partial answer can be found by a visit to the almshouses and charitable institutions of every city. But great as is the population of these refuges the majority of this host will be found hovering on the border line of pauperdom, charges on their own immediate relatives and friends. Five hundred and twenty-five thousand able-bodied men, women and children every year doomed to lives of inactivity and dependence in the midst of plenty. Certainly these figures and especially the train of tragedies that they represent, should cause every intelligent American to think. Should the causes accountable for these conditions be allowed to wreak such havoc? Is it reasonable and sensible in these days that the five hundred and twenty-five thousand wage earners should enter our shops, factories, mills and railroad service with this certain fate awaiting them?

In former times vassals, serfs and slaves gave up their lives blindly to their feudal chiefs; fighting their battles, tilling their soil, selling their own birth rights for a pot of miserable porridge.

As the fourteenth century vassal sold his service and life for food and shelter so the twentieth century artisan sells his labor and life for money with which to buy the necessaries of life. If his wages are greater than his living expenses and he is fortunate enough to escape bodily harm, he may under extremelyfavorable conditions, be able to provide for an independent old age. But if shifting economic conditions condemn him to only a precarious living and if he is disabled by the machinery of industry, only one fate can be his—the acceptance of alms sooner or later from friends or the state. He has not shed his blood as the vassals of old in the service of a master. He has sacrificed himself on the altar of industrial progress, whose masters are practically unconcerned for his future.

Frivolous Society, or the Cloister?

with the seriousness of her high ideal still reflected in her eyes, Miss Drexel was an instant and conspicuous success. She was immediately surrounded by suitors, among whom was no less a personage than Prince Louis of Orleans.

But the Prince was not encouraged. Mrs. Drexel's determination that her daughter should remain free from all serious attentions until she had made her debut at King Edward's Court was not to be overcome.

Yet it is believed that if she is ultimately weaned from her idea of becoming a nun Miss Drexel will marry into one of the old French families. Her mother has declared [illegible] if she marries at all she shall marry a Ca[illegible]

In Lon[illegible] smart society this declaration is said to have caused much uneasiness among eligible members of the English nobility who have fallen victims to Miss Drexel's charms, for few English unmarried peers are of the Catholic faith. Nevertheless, they are making the most of the present opportunity.

As American hostesses, such as Mrs. Paget, Mrs. Ronalds, Mrs. Drexel, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, the Duchess of Roxburghe and Mrs. Perry Belmont, have matters pretty much their own way this season, and as little Miss Drexel is the richest and most engaging of the whole bevy of debutantes, she can hardly escape the attentions of England's very best matrimonial matches.

That she would have her hands full to do so was indicated by the way eligible British peers surrounded her at the impromptu dance which her mother gave last week at Downe place, which she had rented for Ascot week.

Miss Margarita was decidedly the belle of the occasion. Aspiring youths and older suitors were somewhat cheered by the fact that little Miss Drexel seemed to throw herself into the gayeties with all the enthusiasm of ordinary debutantes. In fact, it was remarked that evidently she was outgrowing her desire to become a nun.

Here at her mother's dance she was surrounded by a galaxy of the choicest stars in the social firmament. The Duke of Connaught was present with his youngest daughter, Princess Patricia, who had witnessed Miss Margarita's presentation at Windsor.

It was a great pleasure to Miss Drexel that her inseparable friends—Miss Jean Reid, daughter of the American Ambassador and Miss Ridgley Carter—should be among the dancers. These three girls made a very merry trio, and they were so much together that few men could get more than a word or two with the beautiful Drexel heiress.

That she was indeed beautiful could not be doubted, for not even the remarkable charms of Miss Wiborg, who had made a sensation at the ball at the Russian Embassy a few nights before could overshadow hers.

Certainly, no debutante ever had a better chance to experience the attractions of fashionable life than Miss Drexel now has. London is in an actual ferment of social gayety, with the grand concert of William Waldorf Astor, followed by Mrs. Drexel's dance, and with embassy affairs succeeding each other at the rate of two or three a week.

She sees Mrs. George Cornwallis West making a sensation in her newest fashion dress of stiff black satin, made in the severest style, but cut astonishingly close to her figure, and notes the distinction which Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Potter Palmer shed upon all functions which they consent to grace. No wonder if she becomes enamored of a life so gay and brilliant.

What will be the outcome no one pretends to predict, for Miss Drexel's beautiful eyes are said still to hold that light which marks the youthful religious devotee.

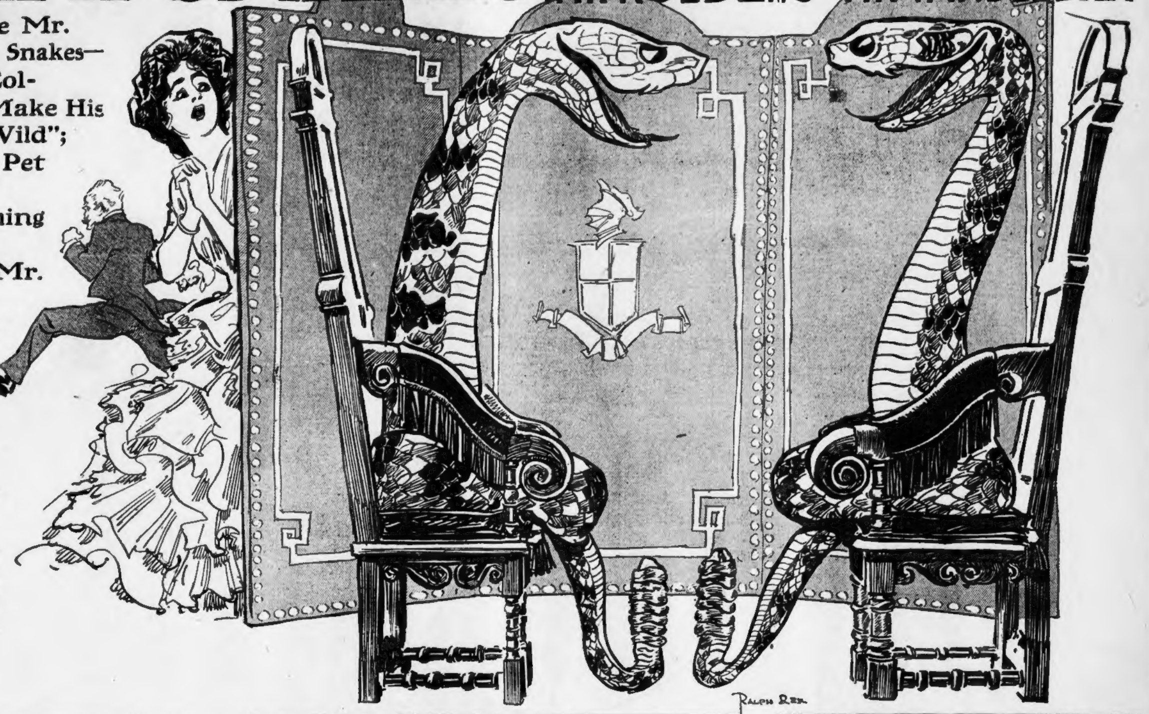
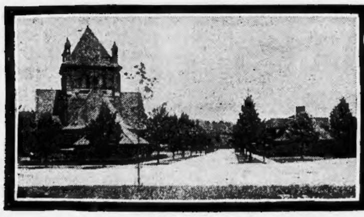
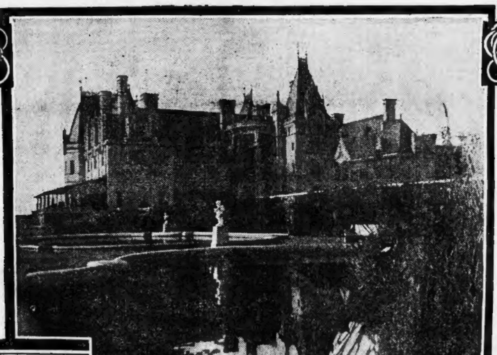
GREAT SNAKES! WHAT A ROW BETWEEN MR ROEBLING AND MR VANDERBILT

The Snakes Are Mr. Roebling's Snakes—5,000 of 'Em—Collected to Make His Place Look "Wild"; but When His Pet Rattlers Got to Making Morning Calls All Over Biltmore, Mr. Vanderbilt and His Cottage Tenants Were "Wilder"—and Now Mr. Roebling and His Snakes Have Biltmore to Themselves, for the Vanderbilts and Their Tenantry Have Fled.

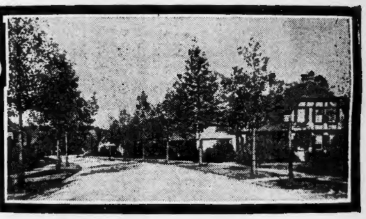




All Souls Church and a Row of Vanderbilt Villas.



Biltmore House, Near Asheville, N. C.



Fashionable Biltmore Villas Deserted Owing to the Roebling 'Snake Plague.'

SNAKES!

Green snakes, yellow, brown, gray snakes; spotted snakes, striped, ring-streaked snakes; hoop snakes that take their tails in their mouths and roll down hill; harmless garter snakes of which only little green frogs are afraid, and rattlesnakes whose metallic warning causes strong men to turn pale.

Snakes by the hundreds, at least a hundred and fifty different varieties of snakes, both wild and semi-domesticated—this is the reptile army that has driven George Vanderbilt in despair from Biltmore, his beautiful country estate near Asheville, N. C., and caused an exodus of tenants from the pretty Vanderbilt villas that cluster about Biltmore.

Until now hardly a whisper of this calamity has been allowed to go beyond the smart society circle at Asheville, of which the George Vanderbilts are the focus. But the departure of Mr. Vanderbilt in desperation for some unknown, snakeless nook up in Maine, the closing of Biltmore House and the desertion of several of the prettiest Vanderbilt villas are facts which, with their cause, could no longer be concealed.

The calamity is more grave and significant than would have resulted from an unassisted migration of snakes from the North Carolina hills to enter high society under the aegis of the Biltmore Vanderbilts. This pest of reptiles was, in truth, assisted—and by a resident of the neighborhood whose wealth and social prominence add immeasurably to the gravity of the situation.

He is John A. Roebling, multi-millionaire, of Trenton, N. J., son of Colonel Washington Roebling, who built the Brooklyn Bridge. Mr. Roebling's splendid country place adjoins that of George Vanderbilt. Mr. Roebling's estate is alive with snakes, native and imported.

"I want my place to look wild," says he. "Besides, snakes are most interesting little creatures."

But if snakes have made Mr. Roebling's place "look wild," that look of wildness is easily rivalled by the wild looks of Vanderbilt cottagers when Mr. Roebling's interesting little rattlers visit them on their verandas—for the reptile population evinces no notion of boundary lines, and is not yet sufficiently familiar with the customs of civilized society to wait for invitations.

Up to this unfortunate contretemps Mr. Roebling and Mr. Vanderbilt were close personal friends. Mr. Roebling became a vestryman in Mr. Vanderbilt's All Souls Church at Biltmore. He was active in the discharge of his duties. Every Sunday morning he assisted George Vanderbilt in taking up the collection. In wealth and in social influence he was second only to Mr. Vanderbilt.

At first Mr. Roebling's snake fad was not indulged in to excess. He kept as pets only a few dozen snakes of the small and harmless kind that showed no inclination to stray far from a home that Mr. Roebling made so attractive to them.

The beginning of trouble on the snake account dates from the time that Mr. Roebling started work on the mansion on St. Dunstan's road that will take eight or ten years to complete, and which will not be very much overshadowed by Biltmore itself.

At the same time began improvements of the large park and grounds which surround the mansion; began also a steady increase in the snake population, necessary to contribute the desired touch of "wildness" at which Mr. Roebling was aiming.

At the present time it is asserted that no less than five thousand snakes call Mr. Roebling's grounds their home. They cost him all the way from fifty cents to fifty dollars each—according as they were native specimens or exotic varieties received through the Custom House.

The mountaineers around Asheville to a man stand with Mr. Roebling in the snake controversy. They have reaped a harvest hunting native snakes on the mountain sides and selling them to the millionaire at fancy prices. This last Fourth of July was made especially glorious owing to the quantity of crackers, rockets and pinwheels the country folk were able to lay in through Mr. Roebling's ready market for snakes.

George Vanderbilt.

No North Carolina snake is safe. Whole families may be seen on the hillsides engaged in the profitable industry of snake-hunting. Never have they exhibited anything like such industry at raspberry-picking. Almost every day some mountaineer or his wife or some of his children will call on Mr. Roebling with the numerous result of the day's snake chase, which the millionaire snake fancier will inspect with ejaculations of delight and pay for in cash at the highest market price.

He even encourages the country folk to invent and operate new snake-catching devices, whereby the snake industry has become more profitable than before—the market remaining firm, however abundant the supply.

Formerly tenants of the Vanderbilt villas loved to visit Mr. Roebling on his estate for luncheon and see him feed his snakes—but that was before the Roebling reptiles had advanced so far in civilization as to acquire a passion for travel in foreign lands, namely, neighboring lawns and front porches.

The snake harvest was richest in the early Spring, when the sun first shone hot upon the rocks of the southern hillside slopes. Then the rattlers came out to sun themselves after the long Winter sleep, and presently to find themselves surrounded by fine broods of little rattlers. These harmless rattler infants were easily captured. Mr. Roebling welcomed them eagerly.

Then came a period of cold Spring weather during which the Roebling snakery was inactive. But with the sudden oncoming of hot weather, as though to make up for lost time, there was a sudden and remarkable activity among all the Roebling snake species. They squirmed through the grass over to the Vanderbilt estate and along the dusty road to the lawns of the Vanderbilt villas.

Negroes do not love snakes. Colored servants, scared out of their wits by the appearance of Mr. Roebling's pets sunning themselves on the porches or making voyages of discovery in the kitchens, gave notice, and could not be induced to return to their duties.

Owing to Mr. Roebling's popularity and social influence, Mr. Vanderbilt's cottagers were loath to make complaint. They put up with visits from little green garter snakes, and were even hospitable to larger reptiles of the non-venomous kind.

But when lusty young rattlers began to call at all hours of the day and night there was a revulsion of sentiment in the cottage colony. The climax was reached one morning two weeks ago, when a cottager who had paid Mr. Vanderbilt $700 a month for one of his villas stepped from her door right upon the tail of one of Mr. Roebling's choicest rattlesnakes.

The snake didn't like its reception. Mr. Roebling had never treated its tender young rattles in this rude manner. It hissed its surprise and pain while striking at the lady's foot with immature, harmless fangs. But the lady was scared. This was the limit. She called up Mr. Vanderbilt on the 'phone and told him so. Mr. Vanderbilt said he would call. He called.

Mrs. George Vanderbilt and Her Little Girl in the Biltmore Floral Parade.

"But what can I do?" he asked. "Mr. Roebling certainly has a right to keep snakes."

"He doesn't keep them," objected the lady; "he turns them loose."

"That's true," said Mr. Vanderbilt. "If a man keeps snakes, he certainly should keep them at home. I'll see what I can do about it."

Naturally Mr. Vanderbilt disliked to annoy his snake-charming vestryman, so he put the matter very mildly.

"Pshaw," laughed Mr. Roebling, "they're only baby rattlers. They couldn't harm a child."

The "baby rattlers" became more and more sociable. They were growing rapidly. The boney buttons on their tails were beginning to send out faint protests when they were treated with scant ceremony. The cottagers thought it probable that their fangs were keeping pace with their rattles, and presently Mr. Roebling received news that several of his pets had been killed by Mr. Vanderbilt's tenants. He was very angry.

"If I catch any one killing my pets I'll sue them," he said.

The threat failed to stop the slaughter of Mr. Roebling's snake innocents, so he sent word to Mr. Vanderbilt that if it didn't stop he'd refuse to act as vestryman in Mr. Vanderbilt's church any more; more, he wouldn't go to Mr. Vanderbilt's church at all.

Mr. Vanderbilt called on the Rev. Rodney Rush Swope, his rector at All Souls' Church, about it.

"If something is not done," he said, "my tenants will all leave. I and my family will have to leave, too, for these snakes are everywhere.

Mr. Vanderbilt's Biltmore villas yield to him an income of about ten thousand dollars a month. They are let to families of social consequence. Without the cottage coloney Biltmore House would be like a royal court without courtiers or ladies-in-waiting.

"Why don't you go to Mr. Roebling and have a friendly talk about it?" suggested the rector.

"I would," said Mr. Vanderbilt "but I don't want to hurt his feelings. He's very fond of his snakes. He doesn't believe them capable of doing any harm."

So Mr. Vanderbilt concluded to take a strictly business view of the situation. He directed his agent to see Mr. Roebling and impress it upon him, respectfully but firmly, that his snakes were driving away Mr. Vanderbilt's tenants, nipping $10,000 a month out of Mr. Vanderbilt's income, and promising to turn Biltmore into a howling wilderness.

The agent saw Mr. Roebling. He returned to Mr. Vanderbilt very much downcast. Mr. Roebling had got "good and mad." He sent word that Mr. Vanderbilt would better attend to his own affairs.

When news of this interview got about several more tenants sent the keys of their villas to Mr. Vanderbilt and quit the Biltmore colony. Mr. Vanderbilt once more consulted his pastor. He said:

"Never in my life was I in such a dilemma."

The Rev. Mr. Swope racked his brains, but could offer neither a solution of the problem nor any consolation. It was shortly after this that Mr. Vanderbilt left Biltmore for the Maine woods, declaring that he was "positively sick" over the whole snake controversy.

Mr. Vanderbilt left instructions with his managers to try their best to settle the difficulty in their own way. A few days later other members of the Vanderbilt family went away. Then Biltmore House was closed up and the servants disappeared.

There are as yet no signs that Mr. Vanderbilt's managers have been able to impress either Mr. Roebling or his snakes on their unneighborly attitude. The latest news from Asheville is to the effect that if Mr. Roebling persists in his present course he and his snakes will presently have the whole of Biltmore to themselves.

How the Kaiser Will Protect His Subjects' Teeth.

IN the German City of Freiburg the municipality has established a free dental clinic, where not only the teeth of children are carefully treated, but instruction is imparted to the children in whatever knowledge is essential concerning teeth and their preservation.

The dentist at the head of this school clinic examines all the children in the city, both in their homes and in the public schools. A report on such examinations is sent to the parents, who are asked to send their children to the school dental clinic for free treatment.

Those children having ten or more poor teeth are first treated, an exception being made in the higher classes where those with only slight defects are to be treated, so that they will leave the public schools with sound teeth. After these worst cases have been attended to, all other children with defective teeth are to be treated, the younger ones given the preference. The treatment of the teeth includes extraction, filling, crowning, etc.

There is no actual instruction in dental hygiene, but at the opening of the dental clinic the teachers explain its objects and workings to the children. The "zahnkarte" (tooth report card) contains on the reverse side instructions as to the care of the teeth.

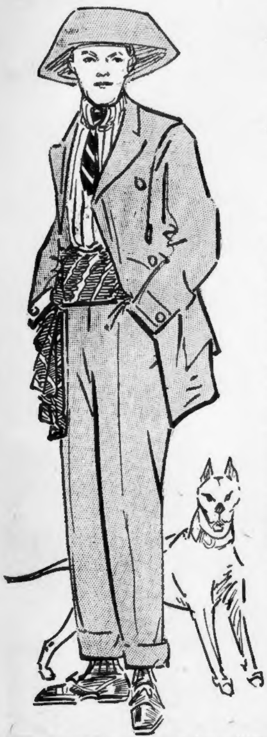
The Clothes Men are Wearing in London

Marvels in Dress Waistcoats, Ruffled Shirts, Single-Breasted Frock Coats, Patent "Spring Back" Golf Coats and Colored Flannels Worn By Fashionable Men-About-Town.



George Alexander in His Red and Brown Flannel Suit, with Cummerbund Sash.

London, July 5.

THEY still set the fashions for men in London, and just at the present moment they are setting a remarkable number of new and very striking ones, which will surely find their way to America sooner or later.

The great strength of England in the matter of fashions is that men of the first importance in politics, literature and the most dignified walks of life devote all the resources of their powerful minds to making themselves beautiful and attractive. In the United States men of similar eminence profess to be above such considerations.

Englishmen are not afraid of wearing new, strange, curious or even old-fashioned things. They prefer to be different from their neighbors. In this they present a striking contrast to young Americans of fashion who seem to be all dressed alike because they all try to wear clothes of the prevailing "style."

Over here you see an extraordinary diversity of costume among men at any ordinary fashionable gathering outside of royal functions, where the court officials prescribe exactly what you must wear. Among the fashionable crowd in Rotten Row you will see one well-known man-about-town wearing a quiet, dignified frock coat and silk hat, and beside him another equally well-known man wearing a marvellously colored flannel suit.

You may run your eye over the gathering and discover more striking and curious fashions of dress than any twelve men could wear at once.

One advantage that Englishmen enjoy is that the British boy is much more respectful than the American. No British urchin would dare to jeer at Mr. Austen Chamberlain's queer single-breasted frock coat, or Lewis Harcourt's pink vest, or Max Beerbohm's china waistcoat buttons, or Lord Reggie Somebody's lavender suit.

Max Beerbohm, essayist, wit, caricaturist and brother of Beerbohm Tree, probably wears the most remarkable evening clothes of any man in London. He is a very conspicuous figure at the theatres, where men and women go to look at his clothes rather than to see the play.

Max's latest triumph in waistcoats is a black silk one, with large white china buttons, having scored flat tops. The garment is cut with long points in front. He also possesses a heliotrope waistcoat with green china buttons, but as somebody remarked, "Max Beerbohm is Max Beerbohm."

Max also wears a soft figured silk shirt with his evening clothes and sometimes a "polo collar," which is a soft, white standup affair.

Londoners of less daring are wearing soft pearl-gray cassimere waistcoats with smoke-pearl buttons.

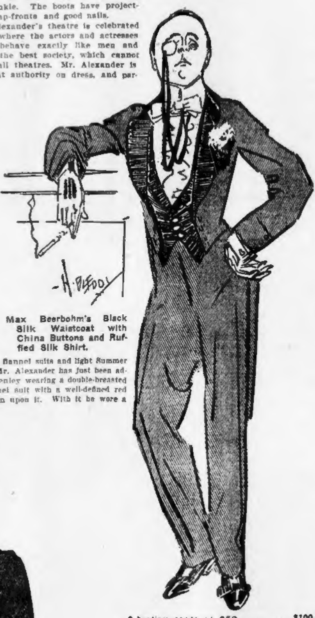
Soft pleated white linen shirts for evening wear are decidedly fashionable this year. Some of the smartest men about town are wearing them. Lord Henry Vane Tempest wore one at the opera the other evening, and as the Prince of Wales invited him into his box this shirt is certainly all right. Sometimes these soft linen shirts are also ruffled.

Mr. Lewis Vernon Harcourt, known as "Lulu," who married Pierpont Morgan's niece, is the most smartly dressed man in the House of Commons. Lulu's latest contribution to fashion is his one-button morning cutaway coat. It is of rough black stuff trimmed with wide braid, is sharply cut in at the waist and has rather long and flaring tails. Its very low opening gives a splendid opportunity for the display of a fancy waistcoat and a splendid Ascot tie. A large amount of waistcoat shows above the one button of the coat. Mr. Harcourt wears a very high winged collar with rounded points. He carries a silver-handled cane, three feet, ten inches long, which is a fashion many other men are following.

Austen Chamberlain has inherited all his father's ability to wear magnificent clothes. He has all the old gentleman's spruceness, aplomb and aggressiveness. He even wears a monocle with the same air as his father. Austen has delighted the fashionable public this season by his single-breasted frock coat. It is a very cool and appropriate garment for the hot weather and yet as dignified and imposing as the double-breasted frock coat. With this coat Mr. Chamberlain wears a pink linen slip (as the false inner waistcoat is called), a pea-green waistcoat and a large olive-green Ascot tie. His patent leather shoes have white buckskin tops. He wears a green orchid in his buttonhole.

Arthur Balfour, the late Prime Minister of England, sets a great many interesting fashions for golfers. Mr. Balfour now has a patent golfing coat, in the back of which is a large pleat which opens up when the wearer is driving the ball and springs back into shape when he comes to rest. It presents the general appearance of a Norfolk jacket. The patent pleat runs up and down the centre of the back. Its springiness is provided by horsehair cloth. The belt is neatly sewn on all around, into which the waist or body of the garment is gathered in such a way as to leave a comfortable "pouch" above the belt for two spacious breast pockets. The skirt of the coat is full and "springy" below, and has two large laid-on pockets. The sleeve at the wrist has an inch-wide strap for buttoning up to keep cold or rain out. This Norfolk can never be worn undone. No waistcoat is needed, a lining of thin natural wool being sufficient. The breeches are very easy and ample, but with a close-fitting strap below the knee, a pair of gray canvas gaiters, covering the lower knee-button, and leaving three above it, fitting closely to the calf and top of boot, where they do not reach farther down than the ankle. The boots have projecting soles, flap-fronts and good nails.

George Alexander's theatre is celebrated as a place where the actors and actresses dress and behave exactly like men and women of the best society, which cannot be said of all theatres. Mr. Alexander is a very great authority on dress, and particularly on flannel suits and light Summer clothing. Mr. Alexander has just been admired at Henley wearing a double-breasted brown flannel suit with a well-defined red check design upon it. With it he wore a soft shirt with a pattern of red, blue and brown stripes. The high turnover collar was of the same pattern as the shirt. The shirt cuffs were doubled back. The trousers were well turned up to reveal lavender socks with white dots.



Max Beerbohm's Black Silk Waistcoat with China Buttons and Ruffled Silk Shirt.

A well-known writer has recently computed the amount of money spent upon dress alone by a typical rich man of fashion. The expenditure for a year amounts to $7,307.10, which, contrary to general belief, is nearly as large as that spent by a woman of the same class on dress.

The details of expenditure have been compiled from bills actually sent in by the tradespeople to a well-known man-about town. The prices given are the very highest that can be paid in London and are therefore nearly equal to the New York prices. Here, for instance, is the year's tailor's bill:

2 hunting coats at $50	$100.00
6 pairs of riding breeches at $25	150.00
1 covert coat	40.00
2 suits for morning rides at $50	100.00
1 evening hunt coat	50.00
1 evening suit	75.00
1 evening suit with short coat and two pairs of trousers	90.00
6 white waistcoats at $8.00	48.00
2 morning suits for Spring wear at $50.00	100.00
2 Summer flannel suits at $40.00	80.00
1 cashmere suit	40.00
1 tweed overcoat for traveling	40.00
1 thin dust coat	30.00
1 Winter overcoat	75.00
1 fur-lined coat	500.00
1 dressing suit to put on after hunting, composed of short jacket and trousers in silk suiting	75.00
1 frock coat	75.00
4 pairs of striped cassimere trousers at $12.00	48.00
2 Winter waistcoats at $15.00	30.00
6 Summer waistcoats at $8.00	48.00
2 tennis suits at $35.00	70.00
6 pairs of flannel trousers at $8.00	48.00
5 fancy silk waistcoats at $30.00	150.00
5 hunting waistcoats at $12.00	60.00
Total	$2,122.00

A man's expenditure is largest on hosiery, neckties and underwear. The fashionable Englishman wears many beautiful and costly silken articles, which the writer regrets are rarely if ever displayed to the public.

Some men feel it necessary that their Summer attire should be composed entirely of harmonious shades. For instance, with a brown flannel suit they will wear brown socks, brown necktie, brown striped shirt, brown band on the straw hat. Those who enjoy great eminence as wearers of clothes, however, avoid this monotonous harmony and aim to charm the eye by harmonious contrast. The truth upon this grave subject was thus wisely expressed by a famous Burlington Arcade hosier:

"Personally, I prefer the harmonies of contrast. But I frequently recommended the one-color get-up simply for the reason that I detect in the appeals of those who seek my advice in this matter an absence of the sense of contrast, and I feel that in the one-color idea they would be less likely to make mistakes. The man in the brown lounge suit, with tie and socks and shoes to match, and perhaps handkerchief-border as well, may strike one as being a trifle too suggestive of the gay young Mayfair hero of musical comedy, but he cuts a more agreeable figure to the eye in such a get-up than he does in a sartorial scheme of badly-ordered contrasts. On the other hand, I would not like to recommend the one-color arrangement to a man who understands the harmonies of contrast, and knows by instinct how well certain different colors blend, and is intuitively alive to the laws of proportion. Some men are apt to choose their fancy waistcoats without, as they do so, keeping in mind the colors of the suits they are to go with. A light gray washing waistcoat is a nice enough thing in itself, but it ought not to be worn with a brown suit. Neither should it be worn with a blue suit. The contrast in these two cases should be, white on brown and fawn on blue, the necktie for each combination being black. Gray gloves look well with gray or black suits, but for brown or blue suits they should be the shade of wash leather."

The same authority predicted that the soft pleated linen shirt would come more and more into fashion. It has the great merit of being an article which to look well must be expensive. It would be impossible to produce a cheap imitation that would wash. In any case the pleated shirt requires the services of a superlatively excellent blanchisseuse and cannot be worn by the man who depends on the ordinary commercial laundry.

"The pleated linen shirt," said this high authority, "is very comfortable, and I venture to think looks extremely well. A great point in its favor is that it has the good word of women. Therein is the best answer its advocates can give to the men who argue it is effeminate, for women detest effeminacy in masculine attire. There is no question about that."

Here is the typical London dandy's hosiery bill for the year:

36 silk undervests at $8.00	$288.00
24 silk suits of underwear at $35.00	840.00
12 colored linen shirts at $5.00	60.00

A LITERARY COURTSHIP

When Rex Beach of "The Spoilers" Read to Her His Chapters About the Passionate Arctic Savagery of His Hero's Love, He Glanced Up and Caught Her Trembling ---Well, She Tamed Him Down and They Are Honeymooning Now.

EDITH CRATER SAMMS, NOW MRS. REX BEACH.

"YOU remind me of the heroine of a novel I am writing."

The young woman who inspired and heard this speech blushed. She knew it was significant—as significant as the widower's formula, "You remind me of my dear, late wife." Is not the heroine of a man's novel for the time the chief and most wholly admirable woman in the world to him? The compliment was not even subtle, but that it pleased the young woman was obvious, for she blushed again, a rosier pink, and murmured:

"I should like to meet the heroine of your novel—between book covers."

"You shall," he returned, eagerly, "but meanwhile do you care to know her in a less attractive form—in advance sheets?"

"Yes, thank you."

"I would be honored if you would allow me to read the book to you."

"I should be delighted."

So it befell that Rex Beach, Alaskan prospector and author, found himself in a cozy alcove library, sinking his muscular young person in the fragrant leather cushions of a study chair, and thinking how wondrously pretty a svelte, pensive blonde, in a white mulle dinner gown, looks in the light that filters softly through rose-colored lamp shades.

He had met Mrs. Edith Crater Samms in Denver at a dinner three days before. He had toasted her in silence. "To the moss rose—bless her sweetness," he had said to himself, setting down the glass and smiling at his own whimsy. For she had worn a gown of thin, shimmering silk, pink as the heart of a rose, and over this was thrown, as he saw her alight from her carriage, a long silk coat of pale green satin. Thus she had suggested to him his favorite of the rose family, "the loveliest and most modest of all the roses," he said. He had hoped she would wear that exquisite pink gown again to-night, but she had chosen white, and now his fancy was galloping again, in new fields, lily fields, and he wondered how he could have thought any color superior to that which is no color at all, white.

Mrs. Samms, thinking how oddly direct two years in Alaska had made this big, handsome, bronzed caller, turned a bit restlessly in her chair and smoothed the lace flounces of her gown. She was accustomed to admiration. There had never been a time since her babyhood when Edith Crater had not been wrapped in adulation as in a mantle. But this fierce scrutiny was different. Also she secretly admitted, it was more pleasing, though a little frightening.

"You were going to read your novel?" she prompted, to escape that gaze.

"Yes, I beg your pardon."

He plunged with his accustomed impetuosity—Mrs. Samms, who was herself of deliberate manner, and slow Southern speech, admired impetuous persons—into "The Spoilers."

"Glenister gazed out over the harbor, agleam with the lights of anchored ships, then up at the crenelated mountains, black against the sky. He drank the cool air, burdened with its taints of the sea, while the blood of his boyhood leaped within him.

"'Oh, it's fine—fine' he murmured, 'and this is my country—my country, after all, Dex. It's in my veins, this hunger for the North. I grow. I expand.'

"'Careful you don't bust,' warned Dextry. 'I've seen men go plumb drunk on mountain air. Don't expand too strong in one spot.'"

Mrs. Samms laughed. The reader stopped to smile his approval. All the women he knew had laughed occasionally, but they laughed at the wrong time and in the wrong place. This woman laughed at the precise time and place for propriety. And what an illuminating laugh it was—a quizzical, intelligent, sweet laugh, with soft bell tones in it. Many women looked less beautiful when they laugh, the author reflected. This one was more beautiful. She laughed without facial contortion or distortion. Some otherwise fair faces looked, when their owners laughed, as a landscape seamed and marred by crevasses. This face revealed a gleam of exquisite teeth, the arch glance of a roguish eyes, while the face remained as unmarred of surface as a block of marble. It was an admirable laugh, an ideal laugh.

When the author had reached this conclusion, Mrs. Samms again stirred restlessly in her low easy chair.

"Won't you go on reading?" she begged, a deep flush rising to her cheeks.

"Pardon me," murmured the author. "Two years in Alaska makes a man forget that it is rude to stare at what is beautiful." He resumed reading.

"'This air whets every elemental instinct in me,' Glenister broke out again. 'Away from the cities I turn savage. I feel the old, primitive passions—the fret for fighting. I had an ancestor who buccaneered among the Indies a long time ago—so I'm told. Sometimes I think I have his disposition. He comes and whispers things to me in the night. Oh, he was a devil, and I've got his blood in me, untamed and hot. I can hear him saying something now—something about the spoils of war. Ha! Ha! Maybe he's right. I fought for her to-night—Dex—the way he used to fight for his sweetheart among the Mexicans. She's too beautiful to be good, and there's never a law of God or man runs north of fifty-three.'"

Again Mrs. Samms laughed. "You have looked for Roy Glenister and found him in your own heart," she said.

"Admitted."

"But he is a brave chap. I like him in spite of his brawling. And now the heroine who, you said"——

"That you remind me of her. You are she. Do you know that every man's heart is the frame for the picture of one woman? Sometimes—often, indeed, the man never finds her. And let him make as many so-called alliances as he will, that man goes unmated to his grave. But sometimes he finds her, and when he does"——

The manuscript had fallen to the floor. He leaned forward bending a look of fierce tenderness upon her.

"HE LEANED FORWARD, BENDING A LOOK OF FIERCE TENDERNESS UPON HER."

She drew her chair slightly back. "Won't you please read about her?" she pleaded.

Smiling grimly he picked up the fallen manuscript.

"'They led her to their deck cabin, where they switched on the electric light, blinking at each other and at their unknown guest. They saw a graceful and altogether attractive figure in a trim, short skirt and long tan boots. But what Glenister first saw was her eyes; large and gray, almost brown under the electric light. They were active eyes, he thought, and they flashed swift, comprehensive glances at the two men. Her hair had fallen loose and crinkled to her waist, all agleam. Otherwise she showed no sign of her recent ordeal in boarding the boat unwelcomed, in achieving the feat of a stowaway. Glenister had been prepared for the type of beauty that follows the frontier; beauty that may stun, but that has the polish and the chill of the new ground bowie knife. Instead, this girl with the calm, reposeful face struck a note almost painfully different from her surroundings, suggesting countless pleasant things that had been strange to him for the past few years.'"

"'MY PLEASURES ARE VIOLENT, AND MY HATE BITTER IN MY MOUTH,' HE SAID. 'WHAT I WANT I TAKE.'"

Here the novelist turned several of the pages quickly. He seemed to be looking for some passage of special interest in the typewritten leaves. At last he found it and resumed his reading.

"'Unconsciously she approached him, drawn by the spell of his strength.'

"'My pleasures are violent and my hate is bitter in my mouth,' he said. 'What I want I take.'"

"He was gazing out upon the dimly lucent miles of ice; but now he turned towards her, and, doing so, touched her warm hand next his on the rail. She was staring up at him unaffectedly, so close that the faint odor from her hair reached him. Her expression was simply one of wonder and curiosity at this type, so different from any she had known. But the man's eyes were hot and blinded with the sight of her, and he felt only her beauty heightened in the dim light, the brush of her garments and the small, soft hand beneath his. The thrill from the touch of it surged over him—mastered him.

"'What I want I take,' he repeated, and then suddenly he reached forth and, taking her in his arms crushed her to him, kissing her softly, fiercely, full upon the lips."

Here the novelist's companion moved to the other side of the reading table and put forth her slender hand for the manuscript.

"Shall I read a little and rest your voice?" she asked and took up the thread of the narrative where the reader for some reason of impulse had broken it.

In a voice that held an undertone of laughter she read the next paragraph. "For an instant she lay gasping and stunned against his breast; then she tore her fist free, and, with all her force, struck him in the face."

He came around the table and from his height scanned the manuscript.

Returning the laugh he read on: "It was as though she beat upon a stone. With one movement he forced her arm to her side, smiling into her terrified eyes; then, holding her like iron, he kissed her again and again, upon the mouth, the eyes and the hair—and released her.

"I am going to love you, Helen," said he.

Still laughing, the fair head bent over the manuscript. The gray eyes gleamed roguishly. But the interposing hand of the novelist covered the next sentences.

"And may God strike me dead if I ever stop hating you," she cried, her voice coming thick and hoarse with passion.

"Don't read it. I should not like to hear you even quote those words."

The personal note which Edith Crater Samms had tried to keep out of the conversation had returned. She was forced to recognize it, compelled also by her exquisite femininity to evade it. "I think, if you please, I would like to finish reading the book to-morrow alone. I have—a slight headache. Have you been to the opera since you returned?"

But Mr. Beach was permitted, despite the terrifying directness, bred of his life in the North, to call again, and during that call, because of the recurrence of that intruding personal note, Mrs. Crater Samms told him why she could never think of marrying again. Once she had contemplated a second marriage. This was when Wilson Mizner, of California, came a-wooing. He was of the class of bold wooers. With downcast lids she confessed that such a wooer was to her liking.

But though Harry Samms, whom she had married when she was seventeen, and who had shortly afterward disappeared, had never been heard from, and although every one believed that he was dead, she had told Mr. Mizner that she could not be induced to marry again under the circumstances. Mr. Mizner had accepted her decision, had gone a-wooing Mrs. Yerkes, the widow of the late Charles T. Yerkes. It was because there was a foolish story at the time of his marriage that Mrs. Samms would sue him for breach of promise, and because Mrs. Yerkes had been moved to foolish jealousy of her, that she told this story.

It was well, she continued, her cheeks and lips paling, that she had not made a hasty marriage, for Harry Samms was afterward found in an insane asylum in California. Did not Mr. Beach see that it was impossible for them to be more than friends?

Mr. Beach did not. He argued eloquently for a divorce, asserting that of all modern improvements for the amelioration of mankind it was the greatest.

His argument was as successful as his novel, which a month later took rank with the "six best sellers." Mrs. Samms was induced to secure a divorce. So deeply impressed was Mr. Beach with the story of her youthful marriage and her long loyalty and renunciation that he has constructed from them a play, which contains promise of the same sort of which his "The Spoilers" was a fulfillment.

Meanwhile his wooing he found progressed most when he told the young woman who had enslaved him tales of his rude life in the North. At these times her eyes shone upon his as shone the eyes of Desdemona while Othello recounted his battles. For that reason was given to Rex Beach the title of "the Othello of the North."

And last month they were married.

CHAPTER I.

The Heiress to Millions.

IT would have been difficult to find a happier girl in the whole county of Oxfordshire, or, indeed, in the whole of England, than Olive Parmenter, the heiress of Gregory Parmenter's millions, as she sat in the rosary of Silverbeech on the morning of her birthday, a lovely day in June.

She was reading a letter from her lover, and letting it fall on her lap, leaned back smiling in response to the thoughts which the letter had produced.

Almost everything that a girl could wish for in life was hers. No one questioned her claim to beauty. A little above the middle height, she had a supple figure of exquisite mould, with the free carriage of perfect balance, every movement and gesture being inspired by natural grace. Her face was as beautiful as her form. Her broad forehead, white as alabaster, was surmounted by a wealth of wavy chestnut hair; dark, almost black, eyebrows and lashes shaded eyes of the deepest blue—a striking contrast; and her features, although delicately chiselled, were eloquent of character, self-reliance and strength.

Now and again a troubled expression flitted across her face and drew her brows together. This was at the thought of her one care—her father's health.

Her mother's death, some years before, had deeply affected Mr. Parmenter, and he had brought his wealth and only child to England, purchasing the fine estate of Silverbeech at Belborough, and seeking to forget his sorrow in the complete change of scene and life.

But the long, strenuous life in a hot climate spent in amassing his huge fortune had told on a none too robust constitution, and the blow of his wife's death was one from which he had never entirely recovered. His life was now centred in Olive, whom he loved passionately, a love which she returned with her whole heart; but he knew that his days were numbered, and his one great desire was to see her happily married before the end came.

And that desire was now close to realization.

During the previous year the doctors had sent him to Nauheim on account of his heart trouble, and, disliking everything that savored of ostentation, he had scrupulously refrained from letting the fact of his enormous wealth be known. At the same hotel was staying a young soldier, Lieutenant John Fenwick, who had been invalided home from the South African war and was recruiting his health before taking a position at the Foreign Office. The two young people were thrown much together, and were in love with each other before the handsome young soldier knew that Olive was the only child of the millionaire owner of Silverbeech and Olive learned that Jack was the son and heir of Lord Belborough, whose castle and lands lay so close to her home.

It was a love match in the fullest sense, and Mr. Parmenter had gladly given his consent. But some difficulties had come from the other side; and now, on her birthday, Jack had written to say that he was coming over with great and glad news.

She guessed what it was and her heart warmed and her cheek flushed with delightful anticipation.

"Jack has won over his mother at last," she told herself, her very veins tingling with delight at the thought; and she picked up the letter to read it for the twentieth time when a footstep on a path near broke in upon her reverie.

She glanced around and rose with an instinctive shudder of dislike as a man of about thirty years of age, with dark, handsome features and bold, compelling brown eyes, raised his hat and bowed, saying with a confident smile:

"I wish to be the first with my greetings, Miss Parmenter, and when I saw you in the rosary I ventured to come straight here instead of going first to the house. May I wish you many happy returns of the day."

"Thank you, Mr. Merridew," she replied, giving him her hand and withdrawing it instantly. "My father is in the house."

"With That She Swept Out of the Room."

"I came to see you, please. I wish you to do me a great service."

"Yes?" She did not resume her seat, but stood as if expecting him to leave her.

"I have something of great importance to say to you. Please sit down again."

After a moment's hesitation she did as he asked, and he drew a garden chair close to hers and took a case out of his pocket.

"First I wish you to allow me to offer you a slight birthday tribute of my—my regard. This little trinket," and he took out a costly and beautiful brooch of brilliants.

"Thank you very much for your kind thought, but really I could not accept it," she said firmly, with a very decided shake of the head. "I could not."

He frowned and his eyes showed anger. "Why not?"

"It is impossible, Mr. Merridew, really. I could not think of it."

"You must take it," he said, fixing his keen, audacious eyes on her, "or I shall think I have offended you—and I would not do that for the whole world," he added in a low earnest voice.

She both disliked and distrusted him. He had come quite recently to Belborough, and having rendered a slight service to her father when he had been taken ill during a drive, had been asked to Silverbeech, where he had given it to be understood that he was a wealthy American. He had since pestered Olive with attentions which were profoundly unwelcome, but had never before taken such a liberty as this.

"I can give you no other answer, Mr. Merridew," she said, and rose.

"In America such offerings are quite usual, Miss Parmenter," he persisted, rising also.

"We are not in America. But in any case I could not think of it."

He laid the case down. "Don't go, please, and please listen to me a minute. Miss Parmenter—Olive—I wish to have the right to give you such things," he said. He spoke in a deep, vibrating tone, and fixed on her a look of intense feeling.

She paused and bit her lip and then met his gaze frankly.

"I won't affect to misunderstand you, Mr. Merridew, but——"

He took her hand and interrupted her, speaking passionately. "I cannot keep silent any longer. I love you, Olive. I want you for my wife. I cannot live without you."

"Let me go at once, if you please, Mr. Merridew," she cried quickly, trying to withdraw her hand from his grasp.

"Not until you have heard me," he answered doggedly. "You must see for yourself how I love you. It is the one passion of my life; the love of a man who has never before cared even to look into a woman's eyes. You must be my wife."

"Will you release me or must I call for help?"

"For God's sake!" he cried. He released her hand then, and the strenuous pressure of his fingers had left its mark on her white flesh.

She drew away and stood a moment nursing the hand he had gripped so violently. "I am sorry this has occurred, Mr. Merridew; but you must never again even hint at such a thing. Although you have not been here long, you must know that I am about engaged to Mr. Fenwick."

"The heir to a peerage!" he exclaimed with a curl of the lip and a shrug of anger.

"The man I love, Mr. Merridew," answered Olive proudly. "Will you please spare me the pain of prolonging this scene?"

"He is little more than a boy. What can he know of love?" he burst out. "I would lay down my life for you, and I will not see you sacrificed. You ought to know that only your money will induce his family to countenance such a marriage."

"You forget yourself. I am going to the house," said Olive curtly, and turned away.

But he seized her hand again and spoke with mounting vehemence. "What chance of happiness will you have with his family? You know how marriage is regarded by such people. His fancy will pass in a month; your wealth will have redeemed their pawned ecstasies, and then you will be a mere thing of sufferance with them. It is only your money they seek. His mother, Lady Belborough, has said as much. You are buying a title. That's all."

Olive's face was set and a flush of anger mounted to her cheeks. "Do you mean to force me to call the servants to protect me from your insults and violence?" she asked.

"Every word I say is true. Trample on my love if you will, but you shall not be tricked for want of a word of warning from me. I am willing to meet Lady Belborough and repeat to her face what I have just said to you."

For a moment the two stood staring fixedly into each other's eyes, and then her name was called. "Olive! Olive!"

"I am here, Jack, the rosary," she called in answer. Then to her companion. "You will have an opportunity now. Here is Mr. Fenwick himself."

He frowned and let her hand fall as a tall, upstanding young fellow, with fair, frank, handsome features, came hurrying up. He took Olive's hand with a bright smile, and gave her companion a curt, unfriendly nod.

"I thought you were hiding from me, Olive," he said with a smile.

"Mr. Merridew was detaining me, Jack. Now, sir," she added, with a note of challenge in her voice.

Merridew had no lack of courage, and took up the challenge instantly. "I was telling Miss Parmenter, Mr. Fenwick, that I heard your mother say in regard to her that she was only to be tolerated as a possible wife for you because of her father's millions."

Jack started as if he had been struck. "Is this fellow trying to part us, Olive?"

Merridew answered for himself. "I asked Miss Parmenter to honor me with her hand; and when she refused I thought she ought to know the truth about your mother's feelings in the matter. I am willing to repeat it in Lady Belborough's presence if you wish."

"Look here," began Jack angrily, clenching his fists. Then he checked himself. "Hadn't you better clear out?" he said.

"You cannot deny what I have said."

"It is too contemptible to need denial, Jack!" cried Olive hastily.

"Your loyalty does you honor, Miss Parmenter," sneered Merridew. "And that loyalty will be put to a severe test when it turns out, as it may, that you are as poor as—as Lord Belborough himself."

"You are getting on my nerves," declared Jack. "Go before I lose my temper."

"Please go, Mr. Merridew."

"Yes, I will go. If I have caused you offence, Miss Parmenter, at least believe I had no motive but your welfare. When you and others know what I know already, you will understand that, and will perhaps heed my warning. For myself I shall never cease to hope for a different answer from that which you gave me just now;" and with that he raised his hat and left them.

"I always did hate that fellow!" exclaimed Jack with a breath of relief. "And you really mean he had the cheek to ask you to marry him? The brute."

But Olive looked very thoughtful and shuddered. "I am not afraid of much, Jack, but I do believe I could be afraid of Gilbert Merridew. What do you suppose he meant?"

"Nothing. But I could almost wish it were true. People would then have no excuse for chattering about my marrying you for your money."

"Jack!" protested Olive, laying her hand on his arm.

"I'd like a test of the sort. Do you know what I'd do? I'd cut the Foreign Office and chuck the title and everything and just carry you off to somewhere where I could work for you as you deserve. Where love and honesty and work are not bound round by these beastly conventionalities; where they reckon a man for what he is and does, and not by the miserable handle to his name."

And then came lovers' talk. Jack told his great news, which was what Olive anticipated—that the engagement was sanctioned. He brought out the ring and placed it on her finger, and for a long time the world was forgotten by them both in that wondrous harmony of young love which no man or woman has ever yet understood or can ever recall without a thrill of emotion.

Then together they went to tell Mr. Parmenter the news. And when he heard it he brought a deeper flush to Olive's cheeks and delighted Jack when with a smile he declared, "There is only one thing now. I shall consent only on one condition—that the marriage take place within a month."

Olive cried out in dismayed protest; but he would take no refusal. "A month at the outside or never," he threatened laughingly, and Jack gladly joined in urging her. Olive at first broke away, declaring in flaming protest that it was impossible; but turned again, and with her heart in her eyes as she looked at her lover nodded her head in agreement, and then buried her face on her father's neck.

And thus it was settled that they should be man and wife within the month.

CHAPTER II.

The "Honorable" Mrs. Taunton.

GILBERT MERRIDEW was by no means downcast over his refusal by Olive. He had not anticipated any other result; and he had made the proposal only as one step toward the object he had in view.

That object was to secure Mr. Parmenter's millions; and the first and obvious course had been to attempt to gain Olive's hand in marriage. But he was not a man to be daunted by difficulties or stayed by such a check; and he had other and infinitely more powerful weapons with which to continue the attack.

As soon as he had heard of Olive's love for Jack Fenwick, he knew that his suit was certain to fail and that the lover must first be removed from his path.

He had already made one attempt to do this; and although that had failed for the time, he was quite confident of ultimate success in that direction also.

Knowing that Lady Belborough disliked Olive, he had manoeuvred so that a very pretty and attractive American woman, known as the Hon. Mrs. Taunton, who was reputed to be an enormously wealthy widow, but was, in reality, a confederate of his own and a decoy in a number of disreputable schemes, should ingratiate herself with the castle people and affect to be in love with Jack.

The scheme had succeeded to a point. Lady Belborough, dazzled by her reputed millions and fascinated by the promise of the fortune which she declared she could make for the castle people, had influenced her husband to withhold consent to the marriage with Olive and had done her utmost to induce her son to propose to the widow. But Jack's determination had beaten her; and at length she had been compelled to yield. And it was when he heard of this that Merridew had resolved on his proposal.

Rejected though he was, he believed that he had nevertheless succeeded, by his statement of what Lady Belborough had said, in inflicting a wound in Olive's pride which would rankle and help him much in his later schemes.

He returned to his hotel and wrote a letter to Olive in which he apologized for his brusqueness, reiterated his love and desire to serve her, and repeated the statement against the mistress of the castle.

That done, he had gone off to London to put in operation the other and stronger means by which he intended to achieve his object. He had strong cards and was just the man to play them boldly.

His first step on the following morning was a cable to New York.

"To Rachel Merridew, No. — West Thirty-fifth street, New York City. Marriage plan failed. Compulsion the only alternative. Come over immediately. Gilbert."

As soon as that had been despatched, he hailed a hansom and told the man to drive him to Markham street, Mayfair.

It was here that the "Hon." Mrs. Taunton lived in a residence all the appointments of which were suggestive of great wealth. The furniture was luxurious, the servants numerous, and the whole establishment in keeping with the lady's reputation as the possessor of millions of dollars.

The greeting between them was more than cordial. As much as Gilbert Merridew could care for any one but himself, he loved her; and she returned his love. They were tacitly engaged to be married; and some day they would be man and wife; but they both understood that that day could not dawn until they had made the fortune which would give them in reality the wealth which at present they only appeared to possess. They both loved the good things of the world too much to sacrifice them by marriage.

That he should have attempted to win Olive for his wife had been part of their plans; for although it was not admitted in so many words, they had both understood that, had he been successful, Olive would not have lived long as an obstacle between them.

"I know all about it, Gilbert," said Mrs. Taunton, with a smile. "I had a letter from Lady Belborough this morning telling me she had been forced to agree to the son's marriage with Olive Parmenter. She is full of regrets. What are you going to do."

"I made the plunge yesterday; acted the impulsive lover; proposed, and was rejected. I am going to try the other move now, and have cabled to my mother to come over at once and boldly claim her position."

"I did all I could with the boy. He is a nice boy, Gilbert; but dreadfully in love with that girl. All my glances and oglings and sighs were wasted on him. He simply wouldn't give me a thought."

"She's in much the same state; and but for one stroke, the time spent down there would have been all wasted. I got on the right side of the old man one day and, when we were talking about some of his American investments, I found out where he kept his will. Of course, I made sure of that."

"Will that do any good?"

"We shall see when my mother comes. Meanwhile, we must deal with that young bantam, Fenwick."

"We shall manage that," she replied with a smile. "His position at the Foreign Office can be turned to excellent use at the same time. I am glad you arrived this morning. The Baron is to call——"

As she spoke, a servant entered and announced that Baron Felskov desired to see Mrs. Taunton. She told the man to bring him up.

"You can remain behind the screen there, Gilbert. He had better not see you."

When the visitor entered, he found Mrs. Taunton, writing busily at a table. She rose and offered him her hand. He affected not to see it, however, and merely bowed.

"We are alone, madame?" he asked.

"Assuredly, Baron."

"Then I will not waste your time, but get at once to business. You have had the communication from my chief and are willing to accept the—the commission to which it refers?"

"I am certain of being able to succeed in it; otherwise I should not have troubled you to make the visit. I have a young friend in the Foreign Office who w... do anything—of course, for payment."

"The document, of which we must have either the original or a copy, is a secret treaty between the British Government and Persia, which gravely affects the interests of our government. Can you get it?"

Mrs. Taunton affected to think. "Yes; but it will take a little time and will be expensive. Such a thing will be closely guarded."

"It will be worth ten thousand pounds to us, madame," said the Russian deliberately.

Mrs. Taunton shook her pretty head and smiled. "It will cost me twice that sum to obtain it, Baron. And I must have at least five thousand pounds in advance. There are many people to be paid."

He shrugged his shoulders and lifted his hands. "It is too much."

She rose at once. "Good morning then. I do not attempt the impossible, Baron."

"You are hasty, madame. It shall be as you wish."

Mrs. Taunton resumed her seat and in a few minutes the rest of the matter was concluded, and the Baron took his leave.

"You are splendid!" exclaimed Merridew as he came from his place of concealment. "But how will you do it?"

"Mr. Fenwick, of course," she answered lightly. "My young friend in the Foreign Office."

"I don't see—" he began, when she interrupted him with a laugh.

"I love to puzzle you, Gilbert. I don't see all the way yet, of course; but I learned enough at Belborough of Mr. Fenwick's position at the Foreign Office to know that he is one of the only men there who could make such a copy. He is one of the Minister's secretaries and has his absolute confidence."

"But he would never be a party to such a thing, 'Bitha!" cried Merridew.

"It is at least certain that he would be ruined if he were suspected of it. And do you not see his ruin? Would not that be worth as much to us as that Russian's secret service money? Isn't he in your way with the Parmenter girl? And am I not 'Madame Bonheart,' the head of our little band, whose wits before now have found the means of doing even more difficult things? Have patience, Gilbert, and give me some credit."

"You are wonderful, I repeat. But for the life of me I cannot see how you are going to do this."

She enjoyed his perplexity and laughed gayly as she smoothed back her fair hair. She had beautiful hair and a clear, soft complexion, with sharp, clear-cut features and large, dark eyes full of changing expression.

"Listen. We start with much more in our favor than usual. We have got to get a certain document from a certain office. We know of some one who knows where the document would be secreted. Although the boy refused to love me, we are yet excellent friends, and it will be the easiest thing in the world to find out from him precisely where the document is hidden. Is not that a great deal?" she asked, looking up with a confident expression.

"We know there is plenty of money in the Bank of England, but that is not the same thing as being able to get it," was the doubtful reply.

"It is a good thing for you that I am at hand to prompt you in many things or you would make a score of mistakes, Gilbert. Are you losing faith in me?"

He bent forward and kissed her. "That is my answer, 'Bitha.'"

"I love to have you call me that. No one else could make such an egregious name as Tabitha so charming. However that girl can have preferred even such a good fellow as young Fenwick to my Gilbert baffles me. But you do seem to think me stupid, all the same."

"But what will you do?" he asked again.

She set her head on one side as she looked at him and smiled. "In the first place I will punish you by not telling you. But I shall get some of my friends to arrange for me to see this wonderful Foreign Office and spy out the scene of operations. Then I shall be able to tell you, or any one else, exactly where you would have to go and what you would have to do to get the document; and then—why, then I shall get it. And that's all, except that we shall also get the money, which by the way I am not the only one to need."

A frown gathered on Merridew's brow as she said this, but it passed and he laughed. "I know you'll do it all right, 'Bitha. You can tell me the rest when you please."

"That will be when I know it myself, goose," she cried, stroking his forehead and then kissing it. "And now, dearly as I love to have you here, you must not come again until this thing is fixed. The Belboroughs and the Parmenters, and above all, that simpleton Jack Fenwick, must never guess that you and I are—well, what we are—friends."

"Only friends, 'Bitha?"

"Ah, my dear, if they could only know how I love you!" And she threw herself into his arms. "It must be good-by for a time, Gilbert; and wherever we meet next time it must not be here. So kiss me and make much of me while we have the chance."

"If we were only rich enough to marry, 'Bitha!" he exclaimed.

"Make haste and get the Parmenter millions then."

"I shall get them surely enough; but this young jackanapes must be prevented from marrying that girl or it may be too late."

"Ah, that's my part, and I shall not fail."

"But how? How?" he cried with another frown of perplexity.

She laughed softly, and then putting her arms round his neck looked up with the light of passion in her eyes. "With such an end to gain do you think I can fail? I swear to you, my dearest, that his ruin is as certain as the love I bear you. This my pledge on it," and drawing his face down she kissed him on the lips.

She spoke as earnestly as though hers was a pledge of purest love instead of one of cowardly, treacherous dishonor, threatening ruin and disgrace to an innocent man and lifelong misery to a pure sweet girl.

CHAPTER III.

"The Marriage Must Be Hastened."

"MY Dear Miss Parmenter:

"Will you let me write to express to you my intense regret that I should have allowed myself to be carried to such an excess in my interview with you to-day, as to have detained you by force. I am, however, a man of emotional impulses; and to-day my feelings for you swept me beyond all control. I earnestly beg your forgiveness, even while I feel I have but made my cause more hopeless. But I shall never cease to love you. That love has become a part of my life. I will trouble you no more, however, unless Fate should offer me an opportunity of serving you.

"Meanwhile I am compelled in honor to repeat what I said to you yesterday—that Lady Belborough has openly declared that only the fact of your being the heiress to your father's vast fortune could induce her to receive you into her family. I make no charge of the sort against her son, Mr. Fenwick; I believe him to be an honorable, manly man; but were fortune to rob you of your wealth, you would find that both Lord and Lady Belborough would forbid him to make you his wife.

"I say this in all earnestness as your friend.

"Yours in sincerity,
"Gilbert Merridew."

Olive received this letter on the morning after her birthday; and it produced some of the effect upon which the writer had calculated. She knew that Lady Belborough did not like her, for the mistress of the Castle had on more than one occasion made her feelings unmistakably plain.

The truth was that she was angered by the influence which Silverbeech had gained in the village of Belborough and the district round; she envied its owner's immense wealth; and was intensely jealous of Olive's personal popularity.

Lord Belborough's income was so small, owing to the heavy mortgages on the estates, that it was only with the narrowest cheese-paring management the Castle was kept going at all. This was well known all over the country; and his wife's endeavors to conceal the fact under the cloak of exaggerated pomp and dignity, were recognized and ridiculed. Moreover, as she herself was of no family—Lord Belborough having married her in his teens when she was on the stage—her insolently patronizing airs had made her intensely disliked.

But until Mr. Parmenter's arrival at Silverbeech, the Castle influence had been undisputed; and then the change had come, gradually, but surely.

There had been no display, no ostentation, no squandering of money for the sake of personal advertisement. But no appeal for any worthy cause ever passed unheeded, whether large or small. The church needed restoring; Mr. Parmenter found all the money. New schools, a village library, a workman's institute were wanted; Mr. Parmenter's cheques paid the builders. A hard winter tried the rural population; and at Silverbeech was started an extensive plan for the rebuilding of every rotten, tumbledown cottage in the district, giving work and wages to all who asked for them.

As a result, the whole countryside looked to Silverbeech for the lead in all movements; and Lady Belborough resented the transfer of allegiance as bitterly as if it had been a willful personal insult.

Latterly, Olive, clever, clear-headed, shrewd-witted girl that she was, had taken charge of these matters, greatly to Mr. Parmenter's delight; and on more than one occasion she and the mistress of the Castle had come in conflict. In one instance, a movement affecting the whole county was concerned; and Lady Belborough, strong in her belief that all would follow her, had made it a trial of strength between the two interests. Olive had quietly but firmly held her ground; and the county had sided with her. Lady Belborough had never forgiven what she regarded as a humiliation.

Then had come the unwelcome news of Jack's love affair; and his mother had done her utmost to prevent the engagement. But he had shown grit; and, having his father on his side, had won his way.

Olive knew, therefore, that what Merridew had said was likely enough to be true; and the words rankled. But she was sure of her lover. When he had first asked her to marry him, there had been no more thought of money in his mind than there had been any knowledge of his rank in hers. They loved each other; and despite his mother's hostility, Olive had set about the task of preparing for her wedding with a heart that would have been entirely light and glad, but for the condition of her father's health.

And a day or two after the formal engagement an incident occurred which caused her the gravest concern on this account.

A servant came hurrying to her to say that the master of Silverbeech had had a fainting fit and was ill. Hastening to the library, she found him lying on a couch, faint and ill and gasping hard for breath. On the floor close beside him lay a telegram, which she read in the hasty glance she cast at it.

"After all these years have just heard of you. Expect me.
RACHEL."

Replacing the message in its envelope, she put it away in his pocket while applying the remedies always kept at hand for these heart attacks; and as soon as he was able to be moved, she had him taken to bed.

He asked for the telegram, and appeared relieved when it was found in his pocket. When the doctor arrived the rich man was in a condition of intense nervous excitement and suffering severely from shock.

The message had indeed disturbed him profoundly. It had served to reopen the one page of his life of which he was bitterly ashamed. In the long distant past, more than twenty years before, he had been entangled in the toils of a beautiful and unscrupulous woman. In his infatuation he had been suspected of an act which would have brought him under the law, had he not then learned the character of the woman and fled the country.

Although innocent of the crime, he had since made reparation a hundredfold for it; but the remembrance of that chapter of his life had been like a scourge of scorpions to a man of his naturally honorable character and nervous, sensitive disposition. He had worn the sackcloth and ashes of remorseful repentance for all the years between; and the thought that the secret was now about to be revealed to the world, made him cringe and cower in morbid wretchedness and bitter suffering.

All that day and night and the next day he lay miserably discounting the consequences. The revelation could not have come at a worse moment. His beloved Olive was about to make a marriage on which her whole happiness depended; and if the facts were known, it seemed to him in his morbid fear, her life would be wrecked.

In the afternoon he took his resolution. The marriage must be hastened so as to take place before this terrible news could be told; before the woman who could tell it could reach the country. He could make the excuse that his health alarmed him; and when once she was married, he would face the trouble if necessary, or find some means of silencing this woman.

Late in the afternoon he went downstairs to carry out this plan.

He found Olive at the piano, and after she had finished one of his favorite songs—she had a rich, soft mezzo-soprano voice—he called her to sit by him.

"Is Jack at Belborough, Olive?" he asked.

"No, father. He has gone back to his work at the Foreign Office."

"Wire to him that he must come to-morrow, child. I want your marriage to be hastened forward. It must take place at once—within a week."

"Why, dear?"

"Do as I say, child. Now:" was the almost testily spoken reply.

She went and despatched the message and then returned to her seat by him.

"Now tell me, dear," she said with a gentle smile.

"My heart, Olive. Gregory tells me I had a narrow shave yesterday."

"Was that bad news you had yesterday, father?"

"What news?" he replied, looking at her sharply.

"That telegram from New York, dear."

He winced. "Did you see it?"

"I could not help it. It was lying open by the side of the couch."

He was silent, looking very troubled. "Don't ask me, Olive. I can't tell you."

"If it is bad news, don't you think I am strong enough to bear it with you?"

"Don't ask me," he repeated.

"Well, there is something I should like to tell you, dear. Mr. Merridew asked me on my birthday to marry him; and when I refused he hinted that I might some day be poor; and after he had left, he wrote me this letter."

"He read it with a heavy frown, and then shook his head. 'No, child, there is no fear of anything of the sort—unless you spend all the money yourself." And he tried to pass off the incident with a weary smile.

"Who is this Mr. Merridew, father?"

He appeared to be about to answer sharply, but checked himself. "Don't worry yourself or me about him, Olive. I feel tired"; and he sank back on the sofa as if exhausted.

"You have some secret that worries you, dearest. I wish you would tell me. It would be much easier for you to bear, if it is trouble of any sort, and you shared it with me."

"But he waved his hand faintly and closed his eyes, as if worn out. He lay for some minutes like this. Then he started up suddenly and spoke with great impressiveness and some show of excitement.

"Remember what I say, Olive. Your marriage must take place within the week, or it may never take place at all. Write to Mr. Casement that he must be here to-morrow with all the documents ready for signature; and to Lord Belborough that he must be here to-morrow to have all completed. I mean must—MUST!"

The effort appeared to exhaust him, and when he lay back again, Olive bent down and kissed him tenderly.

"Dearest," she murmured.

He returned her caress and smiled up to her. "Don't be scared, child; but I have a presentiment that if you are not married at once, I shall not live to see you a wife."

Greatly wondering and with a heavy heart, Olive wrote the letters and passed an anxious sorrowful night, seeking in vain for some key to her father's sudden anxiety for the hurrying on of the marriage.

That it was in some way connected with the mysterious cablegram from America, she could not doubt; but what could be the meaning of it, or who was the woman who signed herself "Rachel," she could not even venture a guess.

The following morning brought her a telegram from Jack saying he would be down early; and at noon Lord and Lady Belborough arrived, followed a few minutes afterward by Mr. Casement, the lawyer.

Mr. Parmenter explained his wishes, and no objection was raised; but Lady Belborough was disposed to be very curious when she and Olive were alone. And was as unpleasant as usual.

"What is the reason for all this haste, Olive? It is almost indecent, I think"; and she sniffed unpleasantly. "In our set we are not accustomed to this sort of conduct. It is so bourgeois."

"My father has a presentiment that he has a very short time to live. He had a very serious attack two days ago," replied Olive quietly.

"Of course that might be an excuse, but it really cannot be the true reason."

"You did not raise any objection just now."

"Oh, everybody knows that where Silverbeech is concerned the Castle has to give way. Rank nowadays has always to give way to mere money," and my lady tossed her head and sneered.

"Need we quarrel, Lady Belborough?"

"I am not quarreling, Olive. How can you say such a vulgar thing? Of course when you are the wife of the heir of Belborough we shall expect you to give up this middle class rudeness. You sadly need forming, my dear."

"I have not had the advantages of your ladyship's birth, that I know," retorted Olive, unable to refrain from the little sting.

The elder lady smiled indulgently. "No one knows better than I do how money has deteriorated the tone of society; but really I must try to improve you. But do learn restraint."

Olive laughed. "I am afraid I shall never be very different from what I am. You see I am partly American, and say what I think."

"A positively atrocious habit, child. Only vulgar people indulge that terrible mannerism."

"Jack likes it," was the quick reply, given with a smile.

"He is ridiculously in love with you, I know; and that would account for anything. But he'll get over that, and then you must really be careful. It will jar on him; and you will make heaps of enemies."

"I have not made them round Belborough; but please let me say no more about this. If my father asked me to be married to-morrow, I should do it, Lady Belborough, especially for such a reason as he has."

"I suppose that is his real reason and that it has not anything to do with your fortune. Of course that is most important."

"I don't think Jack thinks so. But do let us cry a truce."

"It is all most extraordinary," exclaimed Lady Belborough, rising. "But then you are a very extraordinary girl."

"Jack will agree about that at any rate," cried Olive. "Ah, here he is, we'll put it to him," she added, as Jack entered the room.

"I have to go to Lord Belborough," was the sharp reply. "You can come to me when this extraordinary matter has been explained, Jack." And with that she swept out of the room, having no wish to witness the greeting of the lovers.

"Replacing the Message In Its Envelope She Put It In His Pocket."

"It Will Be Worth Ten Thousand Pounds to Us Madame,' Said the Russian Deliberately."

CHAPTER IV.

At the Altar Steps.

"WHAT'S all the pother, sweetheart, and what's the matter with the mater?" asked Jack, after the loving greetings between Olive and himself which his mother had preferred not to witness.

Olive told him her father's wish.

"The best news I ever heard in my life," he declared earnestly, with a joyous smile. "But it might have been better."

"Better?"

"Mr. Parmenter might have wished it to take place to-morrow. That would have been even better, wouldn't it?" and he kissed her again. "And what about the mater?"

"She was concerned to know the reason, Jack."

"Oh, reason be bothered. The fact is enough for me. By Jove, this is something worth coming down for in a hurry. I'll write to the chief and get leave for a month. And what is the reason?"

Olive told him of her father's presentiment, and his eyes clouded. "Ah, I'd rather have had any reason but that," he said, sympathetically. "But you don't really think there is any danger of the sort?"

"I hope not; but he is really ill. He had news that upset him the day before yesterday, and you know his heart is not strong enough to stand any great shock."

"I am sorry, Olive. But he is right, I think, to hurry matters on. It will ease his mind to do what he wishes. If he knows you are happy—and I think we can answer that you will be that—it will prolong his life."

"I am very troubled about him, Jack, and so is Dr. Gregory."

"We'll do our best to make him as happy as we mean to be, and then, if happiness makes for long life, he will have many, many years to live yet."

"I suppose it is foolish," replied Olive, suppressing a sigh, "but I cannot shake off a feeling of depression, as if something were going to happen."

Jack laughed. "Something is going to happen, sweetheart—we are going to be married." He took her hand and drew her to him just as the door opened to admit the others.

Mr. Parmenter having gained his way was in good spirits, gave Jack a warm greeting, and asked laughingly if he was much put out by the change of plan. Jack replied in the same spirit, and then whispered to Olive that her father was looking better than he had seen him for some time past.

"He is excited, that is all," she replied. "When we are alone the reaction will come. You will see then how really ill he is."

She proved to be right. Jack remained after his father and mother had gone and when he and Olive returned from a ramble in the grounds they found Mr. Parmenter lying very still and white in the library.

"I am paying the price for my efforts this morning," he said, smiling feebly. "It is a good thing that the marriage is to be hurried on."

The days that intervened were full ones for Olive. There was much to be done to get ready, and Mr. Parmenter was always urging haste, more haste, as though his own life depended upon the completion of the arrangements.

As the days passed his nervous restlessness and agitation increased. His temper, usually calm and even, suffered. He grew querulous and fidgety and asked a hundred times a day if everything was getting well forward. And, strangest of all, Olive often found him lingering in the hall as if on the watch for some one.

On the eve of the wedding day this watchfulness developed almost into eccentricity. He passed some hours actually at the great gates of the drive, and when Olive sought to get him to the house, he answered sometimes testily and at others with fretful impatience.

The preparations for the wedding were bounded forward with all speed meanwhile. It was to be a very simple ceremony. Three bridesmaids, Jack's only sister Winifred, and two of Olive's friends; a friend of Jack's from the Foreign Office as best man; Lord and Lady Belborough, Mr. Casement, the lawyer, and Dr. Gregory, who was in close attendance on Mr. Parmenter.

Lady Belborough had wished to have a much more elaborate gathering and, as usual, found occasion to express her censure in unpleasant terms, venting it chiefly upon Olive. She could not prevent the marriage, but was obviously resolved to make it as little pleasant for her future daughter-in-law as possible. And on the day before the wedding she was especially rude to Olive.

"It is such a hole-and-corner affair," she declared with a sneer. "Whatever we really think, we ought at least to try to show that we are not ashamed of the business."

"My father is too ill for any but the quietest wedding," replied Olive.

"Then we ought to have waited until he is better. This is going to be just an advertisement that the Castle is aware it is a mesalliance."

But Jack chanced to hear this remark and his face flushed angrily.

"For shame, mother," he cried. "You insult Olive by the use of such a term! My wife will be one of whom any man in the world might be proud."

"Never mind, Jack," said Olive hastily.

"You mean that you insult me, John," replied Lady Belborough, angrily. "But it is of course Olive's wish to make a breach between us, and it is only since you have come under such influence that you seek to degrade me in this way."

"Oh, Lady Belborough, please don't say that. Nothing could be farther from my thoughts or wishes than to cause any breach of any sort between you," cried Olive in deep distress.

"It is easy to say that," was the sneering reply. "But this marriage will do it in any event. You have always taken pleasure in thwarting and humiliating me and every one at the Castle."

"I am very sorry you think that. I assure you it is not the case," said Olive.

"Mother, how can you?" exclaimed Jack hotly.

"If you continue to flaunt me in this way I shall refuse to go to the wedding at all," replied Lady Belborough, just as her husband joined the little group.

"What is the matter?" he asked.

"Mother is angry, sir, and has insulted Olive," said Jack hastily.

Lord Belborough had but little weight in his family as a rule; but he was genuinely fond of Olive and immensely pleased with the match his son was making. "I think I can understand," he said very quietly. Then to Olive: "My dear, you will make a very beautiful bride; very beautiful indeed; and you are as good as beautiful. Any man might be proud of you. Jack is the luckiest fellow in England;" and he kissed her tenderly.

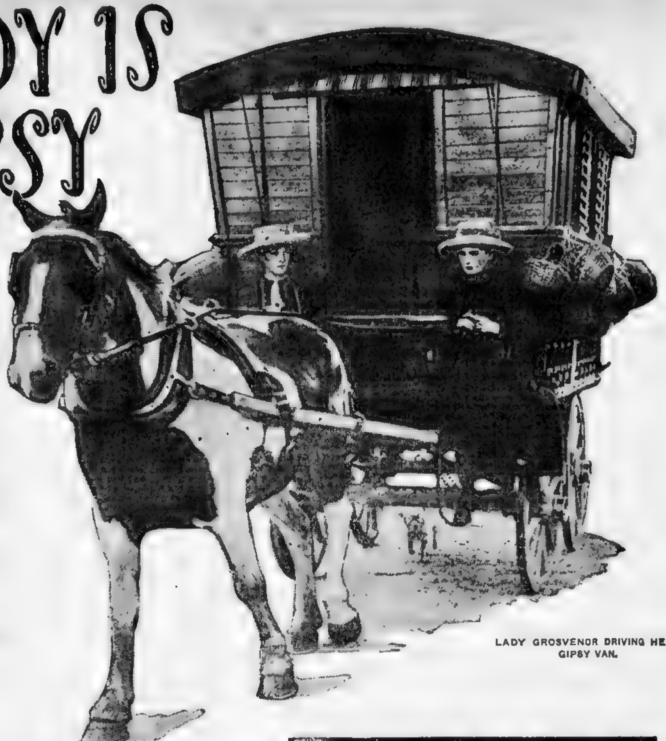
HOW A GREAT LADY IS PLAYING GIPSY

As "Syeira Lee," Looking a Real "Romany" Woman, Big Ear-rings and All, Rich and Aristocratic Lady Arthur Grosvenor is Driving Through Rural England, Selling Tin-Ware and Camping in the Fields—Just to Forget the Tiresome Vanities of Fashionable Existence in London Drawing Rooms.



LADY GROSVENOR DRIVING HER GIPSY VAN.

[illegible]

THE call of "The Green Lanes of Old England" proved so irresistible to Lady Arthur Grosvenor, the young, beautiful and accomplished aunt of the Duke of Westminster, that she has escaped from all her aristocratic [illegible] and is now leading the life of a gipsy.

At this moment she is driving her one-horse covered van over the roads of rural England, or camping at night in the field of some friendly farmer.

She is no merely ornamental gipsy. Like the true Romany woman, she sits on the thills of her wagon, with her feet swinging free, driving the horse [illegible] she cares for and harnesses herself.

Inside the van are her travelling household gods, and the sleeping [illegible] for herself and her husband, Lord Arthur Grosvenor, uncle and [illegible] of the Duke of Westminster, who has turned Romany too. Along the sides of the van swing baskets and articles of tinware, which, like a true gipsy, Lady Grosvenor sells to the farmers' wives.

She has even taken a gipsy name, for on the side of her van is lettered a legend which reads thus:

"Syeira Lee, Licensed Hawker, Cheshire, No. 69."

This means, further, that the Duke of Westminster's gipsy aunt does not [illegible] to be recognized while on her travels as belonging to any other sphere than that of the Romany people. Being rich in her own right, she does not need to earn her living, but true gipsies [illegible] licensed traders, and so Lady Grosvenor became one.

Lady Grosvenor's call to the life of a gipsy [illegible] ample. As a little [illegible] English country [illegible] heard [illegible] answered [illegible] many people [illegible] them as [illegible] the English [illegible]

Lady Grosvenor [illegible] ingly denies a [illegible] ing a book [illegible] periences. [illegible] fying an intense [illegible] back to nature. [illegible] instance of "The [illegible] Wild."

Between her ordinary [illegible] ment as wife of the [illegible] son of the late Duke of Westminster and that of "Syeira Lee, Licensed Hawker," there is almost as wide a social gulf as can be imagined. Her husband is heir presumptive to the richest dukedom in Great Britain, the great Westminster estate, including 600 acres [illegible] heart of London, as well as [illegible]

Sir Robert Sheffield. She was married to Lord Grosvenor in 1893, and the young couple were made much of in aristocratic society. Lord Grosvenor went to South Africa in 1900 and served in the Boer war. [illegible] the close of the war Lady Grosvenor [illegible] Africa and returned [illegible]

Lady Grosvenor recommends gipsy life to all women who, at the close of the town social season, find themselves jaded and out of condition; no matter how wedded they are to refinements of the toilet and the table, they will find that the very fact of having to live roughly will give zest to the experience.

She has a beautiful county home at [illegible] but finds even the [illegible] of an English manor place [illegible] compared with her Romany existence.

If any of her American friends in the Newport set determine to emulate Lady Grosvenor in her present adventure, she thinks they will find England much better [illegible] than the United States, where the roads, except in the [illegible] are not always easy to negotiate, the towns and villages less frequent and rural scenes not so snug and [illegible] inspiring as in England.

[illegible] Mrs. John Jacob Astor, or Mrs. [illegible] Payne Whitney driving her own gipsy cart over New Jersey highways!

[illegible] Lord and Lady Grosvenor are keen and active patrons of sports, especially [illegible] and are fond of "roughing it." [illegible] discomforts of gipsy life [illegible] Nor must it be supposed that they sacrifice one whit of [illegible] social prestige by peddling baskets and tinware along the English highways. On the contrary, by reason of the simple life they are leading they are [illegible] in fashionable London clubs [illegible] drawing rooms.

Besides [illegible] spectacle of a presumptive Duchess [illegible] own [illegible] driving a gipsy van and peddling tinware seemed well worth witnessing, so a correspondent of this newspaper set out to find the transformed Lady Grosvenor. By dint of many inquiries for "Syeira Lee" of other "Romanichel" who journey the roads of picturesque Berkshire her caravan was finally located at Appleford.

It seemed incredible that the roughly clad, sun and wind browned woman sitting in the front of the foremost of the two vans, swinging free feet clad in strong [illegible] shoes as she urged her tired horse onward, could be the rich, beautiful and aristocratic Lady Grosvenor. But Lord Grosvenor, in a pair of snug puttees, was walking beside the moving van, and the name of "Syeira Lee" was plainly printed on its side.

The second van, really a covered luggage wagon, was driven by a hired country youth. No time was lost in taking snapshots of the caravan as it passed along a village street. It was nearly dusk and Lady Grosvenor's caravan was making for a neighboring field, where it seemed she had gained permission to camp for the night. Here, as she and her husband unharnessed the horse from the house-van, Lady Grosvenor submitted to a brief interview.

"Agur lagona" (Romany for "good evening, comrade"), said "Syeira Lee," with admirable gipsy stolidity, ignoring the implication that she was recognized.

The correspondent introduced himself, whereupon Lady Grosvenor smiled quite cordially and made no further effort to deny her identity.

"Only I don't think it's quite nice for people to follow us," she said, with a comical pout, "when we've gone to so much trouble to get away from everybody we know."

In spite of her rough garb, consisting of a flaming red skirt, a blue jersey and a slouched straw hat beneath the brim of which could be seen two immense gold hoop earrings, Lady Grosvenor made really a dainty and petite gipsy. She called to her hired boy and said:

"Panl for the gres."

The boy grinned and led both horses off down the road. Lady Grosvenor explained:

"Of course one can't be a real gypsy without some practice of the Romany dialects. 'Panl' is water, you know, and 'gres' is horse."

"Oh, and your intelligent hired boy has gone to water the horses?"

"Yes, and if you are a friend you will stop and have 'manro' and 'lon' with us."

"Thank you, Lady Grosvenor. That means bread and salt, doesn't it?"

"Yes, and there's a bit of cold 'mas,' too, ready for your 'chourin.'"

Lady Grosvenor amiably explained that "mas" was meat, and "chourin" knife among the Romanichels (gipsies).

Then she condescended to drop Romany for pure English as she exhibited the different features of her gipsy caravan with evidence of no little pride.

Her traveling establishment is extremely workmanlike, with nothing luxurious about it, nothing to distinguish it from that of ordinary gipsy travellers. There is the main van, just an ordinary vehicle of the familiar type, painted brown, with baskets for sale hung round it, and with kettle and frying pan and saucepan slung beneath it.

Inside the van the first thing that strikes the eyes is what appears to be a small kichen stove. At the other end are two beds, one above the other, after the manner of berths aboard ship. In one of them sleeps Lady Arthur Grosvenor; in the other a lady friend who is accompanying her.

There is a second van—a smaller one, with another stove and sundry stores for use on the way. When the caravan sets out, Lady Arthur Grosvenor, in the character of "Syeira Lee," the gipsy, drives the first van, and a youth drives the other. A magpie in a cage screams encouragment from the side of the first vehicle, and three favorite dogs career around and ahead of the travellers.

"I started on May 27," said Lady Grosvenor, "and am now making my way through Oxford to Ascot.

"Daily routine? Oh, we get up about 5 in the morning. Then we light a fire, and I cook the breakfast. We do all the cooking in the open. We have tea for breakfast, and perhaps bacon and eggs. Breakfast is ready at 6."

"What time do you start your travels for the day?"

"Generally about 8. We go on then till somewhere in the neighborhood of midday, when we have lunch. Lunch is a cold meal, prepared from whatever we may happen to have in the larder—cold beef, for instance. After that we go on till early evening, when we pitch our camp for the night.

"That is the great difficulty. Farmers do not care about letting a gipsy van come into a field or meadow for the night. Of course, we are not allowed to camp on the roadside. The consequence is we have to go on till we can get somebody to take us in. It has made us travel many extra miles sometimes. As a rule, fifteen are as many miles as we cover in a day."

"Do villagers recognize you?"

"Oh, no; not at all."

The correspondent complimented Lady Grosvenor on her travelling equipment, especially the larger of the two vans occupied by herself and her companion for sleeping quarters.

"Oh, it's a proper gipsy van," she said. "It formerly belonged to a real gypsy. You can't imagine how pleasant it is to go about and see the country in this way."

"Do you really sell the baskets and tin ware you have with you?"

"Of course we do," declared Lady Grosvenor. "And clothespins, too. That's part of the verisimilitude. If we didn't do like gypsies we wouldn't feel like them, would we?"

"But, Lady Grosvenor, what is your real object in undertaking such an experience?"

"Why, the novelty of it is perfectly charming. It's such a contrast. It's the best way in the world of quite losing one's self. People don't guess where we are—and Sherlock Holmes isn't interested enough to trouble himself. Besides, it's the simplest of all simple lives—not doing things for the sake of appearances, just go as you please, and gain quantities of health and animal spirits."

"When may you be expected to reappear in London?"

"That would be telling," laughed her ladyship. "We'll turn up, probably, some time before cold weather sets in."

Like many real gipsy women, Lady Grosvenor carries with her in the van a pet magpie which she feeds with care whenever the caravan goes into camp, and whose chatter does much to break the monotony of travel along country roads. She carries with her accurate maps which she consults for desirable highways and probabilities in the way of camping places.

Sometimes her caravan meets or passes that of a real gipsy family, and then are exchanged greetings in Romany:

"Agur lagona."

Sad to say the gipsy phrases that are to be learned from books have many variations among these people of the English roads and fields, which suggest more the argot of thieves and pickpockets than the Romany etymology of George Borrow and Charles Godfrey Leland. But there is no doubt that she thoroughly enjoys her present vagabond existence. London talks of it as a "rippin' lark," and when Lady Grosvenor returns to aristocratic drawing-rooms next Winter she will find herself lionized as she never was before.

Microscopes have been hitherto much limited in their range from the fact that only very small objects could be studied by them, such as a fly's foot, or a single microscopic insect. In order to properly magnify, the glass must be very convex, and this requirement of extreme convexity, if extended to a large glass, makes it so thick that the light does not show through it clearly and the image is dim.

Professor Winkle's invention obviates this difficulty and permits the use of a microscope glass six inches across and, consequently, three inches thick, or a series of glasses of less diameter, and not the least difficulty is experienced in getting a sufficiency of light.

The light is obtained by using a lens, commonly called a "burning glass," and thus concentrating the direct rays of the sun on the object to be examined. This concentration of the sun's rays produces, of course, intense heat, a heat sufficient to set fire to paper, cloth or other inflammable substance and which, if not counteracted, would immediately destroy the object selected for the microscopical experiments unless it were stone or metal.

The ingenious method used by Professor Winkle in counteracting the effect of the intense heat is to direct upon the object thus illuminated a current of air, artificially dried and reduced to a temperature at which it almost becomes liquid.

"OH GOD, FORGIVE THE MURDER OF MY DAUGHTER!"

Thus Prayed the Old German Peasant Mother of Agnes Polreis, in the Crowded Court Room While Kneeling Almost at the Feet of Rich Mrs. Emma Kaufmann, Just Before She Was Convicted of Having Tortured to Death Her Pretty 16-Year-Old Maid Servant.

MRS. EMMA KAUFMANN, THE RICH BREWER'S WIFE CONVICTED OF TORTURING TO DEATH HER SERVING MAID.

COURT HOUSE AT FLANDREAU, S. D., WHERE MRS. KAUFMANN WAS TRIED AND CONVICTED OF MANSLAUGHTER.

AGNES POLREIS, THE MURDERED GIRL.

IN the Criminal Court at Flandreau, S. D., a few days ago, sat two women who represented opposite poles of the social world. The rich woman, wife of a millionaire politically powerful, was on trial charged with murder. Upon her proud face were fixed the eyes of the poor woman, almost friendless and without influence of any kind.

The charge and the testimony showed that the rich woman had fiendishly tortured to death the only daughter of the poor woman.

The haughty face of the rich woman indicated her belief that no jury would dare convict the wife of her influential millionaire husband. The poor woman, broken with grief, looked dazed. Suddenly she left her seat among the spectators and approached the rich woman. Was she about to attack the murderess of her daughter?

No such thought was in her mind. Her conduct was even more sensational. It was indescribably affecting. Dropping to her knees in the aisle and raising her toil worn hands aloft, while tears streamed from her eyes, she besought the Almighty to pardon the one who had tortured to death her only child.

"O God, forgive the murder of my daughter!" she prayed.

When the poor woman's mind and body collapsed, and it was found necessary to take the mother of dead Agnes Polreis back to her wretched little home in the country near Parkston, S. D., whence Agnes had come, two years before, to be beaten to death—so it is charged—by her rich mistress, Mr Emma Kaufmann, wife of Moses Kaufmann, the millionaire brewer of Sioux Falls, S. D.

The story of this instance of almost incredible cruelty practised upon a maid servant by her mistress was printed in these pages a year ago. Agnes Polreis, a pretty girl of sixteen, was hurriedly sent from Mrs. Kaufmann's house to a Sioux Falls hospital where, next day, she died. Mrs. Kaufmann was arrested on the testimony of other servants that she had systematically tortured and virtually beaten the girl to death.

Of course the rich woman was admitted to bail. In answer to the statements of the accusing servants—who said that the woman had an ungovernable temper and that they were often compelled to flee to the cellar from her dangerous wrath—it was explained that Mrs. Kaufmann's mind had been affected by the death of her daughter several years ago. The sight of any other girl—especially a fresh one, like Agnes Polreis—made her frantic.

So strong was public sentiment against Mrs. Kaufmann in Sioux Falls that her attorneys obtained a change of venue for her trial to Flandreau. The news that she had been admitted to bail caused such a mob to gather at the jail that she was smuggled out of a back door to her home, where she had to have police protection.

Mr. Kaufmann's wealth had procured the best legal talent in the West for his wife's defence. Several medical experts were placed on the witness stand. To them was put the following "hypothetical questions" which catalogue the wounds found upon the body of Agnes Polreis after her death:

Assume the following facts: A patient sixteen years old is in a very emaciated condition. She has a sore having the appearance of a cut about one and one-half to two inches long transversely across the point of the left shoulder; she has a sore having the appearance of a cut transversely across the point of the right elbow, extending down to the joints; she has a similar sore upon the point of the left elbow.

"She has a gangrenous sore upon the point of each shoulder blade; the ring finger of the left hand is disjointed, with the bone protruding; the cuticle is off the ends of the fingers; the bone protrudes through the tip of one finger, there are numerous discolorations upon the body; the left knee is badly swollen, the skin broken and off; from the left ankle the skin is off the top of the foot; the sole of the foot is entirely loose, hanging down; the cuticle is off from the toes and the rest of the foot; the right foot is in practically the same condition.

"Such being the facts, state whether or not, in your opinion, such conditions would be due to external violence or disease and its results."

Dr. Spafford—In my opinion to violence.

Dr. Rider—In my opinion to disease and its results (referring to the disease Diabetes mellitus).

In cross-examining Dr. Olney, of Sioux Falls, Prosecuting Attorney Egan asked:

"How could the wound on the left shoulder be self-inflicted?"

A.—I claim these wounds were not self-inflicted.

Q.—How could they be inflicted by another?

A.—By taking a knife and cutting across.

A part of the testimony of Peter Erickson, the man who worked at the Kaufmanns' home, follows:

Q.—Did Mrs. Kaufmann ever threaten the dead girl with violence?

A.—She said, "That girl is so stubborn that I could kill her."

Q.—Did you ever see Mrs. Kaufmann strike or maltreat the girl, Agnes.

A.—I once found the girl on the kitchen floor. Mrs. Kaufmann was there, and told me she had poured hot water on the girl to make her get up. Another time, when the girl was on the floor, and too weak to get up, Mrs. Kaufmann said, "Don't touch her, as she can get up herself if she wants to—she is only working on your sympathy." When Agnes tried to get up by grasping a screen door, Mrs. Kaufmann roughly jerked the door away.

Q.—Did you ever see Mrs. Kaufmann hit Agnes?

A. She often punched her with a broom handle. I saw the girl on her knees many times, pleadingly repeating the words, "Frau Kaufmann! Frau Kaufmann!"

Q. Did you see anything else?

A. Before her final sickness, Agnes was too weak to walk up to her room, so I carried her. Mrs. Kaufmann wanted me to shake the girl first, but I stood her up by a trunk; then Mrs. Kaufmann hit her with a stick a foot and a half long; the girl cried and I carried her upstairs.

Q. Did Mrs. Kaufmann do anything for Agnes' wounds?

A. She put turpentine on her legs.

Q. What happened Friday morning before the girl died?

A. I noticed blood in Agnes' matted hair, but Mrs. Kaufmann told me not to mind it.

Q. What happened after Agnes died?

A. Mrs. Kaufmann, when she heard of it, cried: "What shall I do? What shall I do?" Then she made me scrub the blood stains from the floor of Agnes' room and tear away wall paper with blood stains on it.

George Bessler testified that Mrs. Kaufmann said to him once, when speaking of Agnes:

"She is so stupid, I feel sometimes like killing her."

Mrs. J. T. Udell, a neighbor, heard Agnes crying upstairs; saw her in so weak a condition that she could hardly carry a pail of water down the steps; and saw the girl one day try to run away but return when pursued by Mrs. Kaufmann, and was made to march back to the house.

Miss Janet E. Larson, superintendent of nurses at the hospital where Agnes died, testified that the girl cried out in German:

"My head aches! My stomach aches! I ache all over!"

The case of the prosecution was a very strong one—much stronger, in fact, than was supposed would be presented. The evidence of physicians who made post mortem examinations on two occasions, and of others who knew something of the treatment accorded the girl by Mrs. Kaufmann, was presented and made a part of the evidence of the State.

The physicians did not hesitate to testify that three wounds upon the head, and three at the base of the skull of the dead girl, taken in connection with numerous other wounds, cuts and bruises found upon her body, arms and legs were sufficient to have caused her death.

Testimony was presented showing Mrs. Kaufmann had poked the girl in the ribs with a broom-stick; of having her bathe her feet in ashes soaked with water, forming lye, and of many other instances of alleged cruelty on the part of Mrs. Kaufmann toward the girl, this continuing up to within a brief time before the girl had to be taken to the hospital, where she died, the harsh treatment having continued when the girl was so weak she could hardly stand upon her feet.

Throughout the trial the courtroom was packed with spectators, and demonstrations against the rich defendant frequently had to be rebuked by the judge. The presence of the poor old mother of Agnes Polreis excited much feeling against Mrs. Kaufmann.

It had come to be generally known that the death of Agnes was the second tragedy in the mother's life, the first having been the shooting and killing of an elder daughter by a rejected suitor.

On several occasions the grief-stricken mother has wandered to the Parkston Cemetery, where the remains of her younger daughter are buried, and in the dead of night has been found weeping on her grave, force being necessary to induce her to leave the spot.

Hisses from the Spectators.

The spell of the case, which already had divided several South Dakota communities was apparent in the courtroom. This was [illegible] the hundreds of spectators who crowded [illegible] and resentment toward the defendant.

Hisses came while Erickson was testifying in reference to Mrs. Kaufmann, having on one occasion poured hot water on the girl after she had fallen to the floor from sheer exhaustion, in order, as she is alleged to have expressed it to Erickson, "to get her up." Erickson testified to numerous things showing the customary harsh and inhuman treatment of the girl by Mrs. Kaufmann.

In spite of the unfriendly sentiment manifested by the spectators Mrs. Kaufmann and members of her family appeared confident of acquittal. When the jury retired to consider its verdict Mrs. Kaufmann sat between her husband and their grown son Charles. The Court, the Kaufmanns and the spectators remained in their seats evidently expecting a quick decision.

In less than an hour the jury returned.

"We find the defendant guilty of manslaughter in the first degree," said the foreman.

The spectators burst into applause, which the Judge sternly rebuked. Mrs. Kaufmann turned deadly pale and her head sank upon her hand.

Charles Kaufmann, her son, burst into tears. Her husband seemed utterly crushed. They knew that the least penalty under the law would be four years in the penitentiary.

Mrs. Kaufmann was first to recover her composure. This statement by the Court seemed to give her some comfort:

"The Court fixes October 21 as the date for pronouncing sentence upon the defendant. In the meantime she is permitted to remain at liberty under the bond of $25,000 furnished last June."

Sentence was deferred to the date named in order to give time for arguments for a new trial, which will be made at Yankton on October 10.

The conviction of Mrs. Kaufmann appears to have quieted public animosity toward her. Probably she need fear no more mob demonstrations such as terrorised her upon her release from the Sioux Falls jail a year ago.

Why Cupid so Often "Shies" at the Middle-aged Man.

ALL the poets have agreed that "May and December" should not mate. So most young women seem to think that the rule applies equally to "July and October." If they are very young they make no distinction between the spectacle of a girl of eighteen marrying a toothless gentleman of eighty and that of a match between a young woman of twenty-five and a healthy, cheerful, young coap of sixty.

There is a vast difference. The middle-aged man may make a kind and considerate husband, and will probably possess much more money than his younger rival. If wealth be the chief desideratum in a husband, marry an elderly man by all means, only take care he makes an ample settlement upon you, or you may find yourself in the sad plight of living surrounded by every luxury, but never having a penny you can call your own, and to be the poor wife of a rich middle-aged man is far worse than to be the hard-up wife of a struggling youngster.

In the one case there is the sustaining hope that something may turn up, some wave of a magician's wand may transform poverty to affluence; but in the other your fate is fixed and sealed as inexorably as the law of the Medes. Money will be all around you, but you will never have any of it, and you dare not pawn the antique silver inkstands, rosebowls, and other costly trifles which adorn the drawing room tables, nor engineer a mock burglary, though there are moments when the hot blood of youth urges you to it.

Ah! that's the trouble; the blood runs so cautiously, not to say coldly, in the middle-aged. The heyday of youth is only a memory, and blurred at that; you've to keep remembering that as, night after night, you yawn in front of the fire after dinner, when you would like to be out enjoying yourself with the other young folks.

If you are tired with long years of hard work, cooking your own inadequate breakfast over an oil lamp and rushing away to work in the chill, unaired morning, day after day, week after week, year after year; if the longing for pretty dresses, dainty dinners, sparkling jewels, has embittered your workaday life, if the aroma of the fleshpots is the best savor you can imagine, marry a middle-aged man—or an old man, for the matter of that—if the chance comes your way. Only be honest. Say to yourself, "I am tired of work, I want to do nothing, I'm sick of pinching to make ends meet, sick of turning out day after day in the wet and cold, I want nice clothes to wear and well cooked food to eat, and I don't mind paying the price."

That's the rub; so many people want to get out of paying it, which is distinctly dishonest.

Let the mercenary-minded make their good bargains and pay the price. There are others who follow their heaven sent, unperverted instinct, which tells them that the full flower of love belongs to other and different unions. Youth to youth, that is the call of Nature.

What the "400" are Wearing by Mrs Cholly Knickerbocker.

Some Gowns Worn at Tuxedo Park By Mrs. Price Collier, Mrs. Henry S. Redmond and Mrs. Richard Trimble.

The Characteristic Touch of Brown in Miss Edith Kane's Costumes.

TUXEDO PARK doesn't mean now, as it once did, exclusively social estate It also means real estate.

And a very good investment it has proved, too, for those who exchanged some of the surplus of their bank account for land and a cottage at Tuxedo.

For residence there at ll means social position of the most desirable sort And that's the percentage on your investment to be put down to the social estate.

And in the months when you would rather be elsewhere than in Tuxedo it is always easy to rent your cottage for a very desirable sum. That can be put down to your real estate credit.

The late Pierre Lorillard was certainly far-sighted when he staked out h's claim and mapped out his plan for Tuxedo Park. Although I've no doubt that he'd be rather horrified could he see some of the people who now arrogantly disport themselves within its sacred precincts.

Not that it's easy for absolute "bounders" to gain foothold there. For it isn't. And as for the "trippers" who would like to have a look at smart Tuxedoites—! Well, they might as well stay at home.

They seldom get past the club attendants at the station, but if they do, by sheer cheek, manage to steal a ride in the yellow-wheeled club 'busses they are soon discovered and firmly evicted by the policeman at the big graystone watch tower at the gate.

And a very good thing, too. The "common herd" is really quite too pushing.

The Tuxedo Horse Show always brings a grand "gathering of the clan." It's really quite a jolly day or two, with the Horse Show in the daylight hours and dinners and "doings" of various kinds to fill up the evenings.

I always make a point of putting in a day or two there at that time.

Not that it's the best place in the world to display one's new frocks to advantage, though. You know the Tuxedo women don't go in much for clothes. They wear the same old "duds" over and over again. And yet, I must admit, they always look very well. I suppose it must be themselves and not their clothes that look smart.

And at the Horse show this year they did look smart.

It was warm, and so lots and tons of lingerie dresses were worn. Some of them were quite marvels of fine needlework when you saw them at close range.

Of course, Mrs. Charles W. Cooper appeared in white. She invariably wears a white lingerie frock with a pure white hat and a string of pearls. With her silver hair and dark eyes she is most distinguished.

Some women went to the other extreme and donned very severely tailor-made togs, which, of course, are always "correct" on an occasion devoted to our equine dependants.

Sally Hewitt and Mrs. James O. Green, who you know are the daughters of the late Abram S. Hewitt and granddaughters of Peter Cooper, came in the most simple tailored clothes.

Their sister-in-law, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, the sister of Mrs. Aurel Batonyi, looked delightfully Frenchy by contrast as she sat beside them

Mrs. Henry S. Redmond's was a very good example of the perfect in tailor mades She wore it when she drove her cabriolet on the first day of the show

It was a coat and skirt of thin, fine cloth, with alternating stripes of gray and white. The stripes were of even width and quite wide

The coat, which was uncompromisingly plain, came just over the turn of the hip and was tight-fitting—and perfect-fitting, too. It had no relief, even in the collar or cuffs, which were of the same cloth, simply stitched.

It fastened with four big buttons, which were buttoned through worked buttonholes.

Plaits adorned the skirt, but no trimming. It was, of course, of short walking length, and it was finished with a stitched hem.

It seemed to me rather remarkable the number of round hats with perfectly straight brims that were worn at Tuxedo. The women there seem to have a passion for them. And they have at least the advantage of being very generally becoming. Then, too, they are a relief from the everlasting turned-down brims.

The brim of Mrs. Redmond's hat was quite straight, and it was assuredly becoming to her It was an unostentatious sailor shape of chip, and was trimmed only with red and pink roses and their foliage. With it she wore a veil of thin white undotted tulle.

I always think how radiantly care-free Mrs. Henry S. Redmond looks. And no wonder. She has many blessings—wealth and a charming husband and good social position. What more could the heart of woman desire?

Mrs. Price Collier looked serene that day, too, notwithstanding the fact that her lovely daughter, Muriel Robbins, now Mrs. Cyril Martineau, has gone to live on the other side of the water

Perhaps she really felt that conventional sentiment we hear so often expressed that she had "not lost a daughter, but gained a son."

At any rate she looked very charming and graceful—for she has all the grace of the Delano women.

She wore a tight-fitting Princess gown of rather heavy white linen. It was lavishly ornamented with English eyelet embroidery and had also a delicate lace insertion here and there. The yoke was of lace—baby Irish, I think it was which terminated in a high-boned collar. On this yoke the linen ran up in sharply defined points.

The sleeves were of simple puff shape and ended in a wide band cuff of embroidered linen.

But the most individual touch of the gown was the buttons They ran from yoke to hem right up the back in one long, straight row. And they were of mother-of-pearl and glistened in the sunlight.

Naturally with an all-white gown you would expect an all-white hat to be worn. But this year a good many women are asserting their independence and are wearing hats of any old color with dresses of white. Wherein they display not only independence but good sense. For not to everyone, by any manner of means, is an all-white becoming. It has an irritating fashion of making some complexions look sallow One's Individual Accent in Dress.

So with this linen gown Mrs. Price Collier wore a hat with gray-blue feathers ornamenting it. The hatbrim was straight across the front, but lifted slightly at the sides. A big chou held the feathers directly in front. They ran from there back on either side and fell over the back brim. With her white gown Mrs. Price Collier wore a single strand of beautiful pearls

I think it must be rather trying to be the sister of a great beauty. Comparisons are always odious. However, being the sister of Mrs. Frank Webb, by many considered the most beautiful woman in New York, doesn't seem to worry Mrs. Richard Trimble at all. And it needn't, for she can quite hold her own.

While she is not so slender as her sister, she has a charming, fresh color, and much more character in her face than the beautiful Mary Randolph that was.

Mrs. Frank Webb, with Mrs. John Jacob Astor, has done much to make gray hair with youthful faces fashionable. They are both wonderful examples of this effective contrast.

Mrs. Richard Trimble (...) affects neutral tints in her gowns a great deal. Grays and snuff color are often chosen—and a wise choice it is for any one inclined to be stout, for the outlines have the effect of fading into the background and are not too clearly defined.

There was nothing, however, neutral about the coloring of the gown Mrs. Richard Trimble was wearing at Tuxedo. It was a gown of decided stripes in black and white silk, worn over an underwaist of muslin and lace.

The silk of the waist was draped rather loosely in front and there were attached pieces which extended like little capes out over the sleeves.

The waist was cut down in a deep oblong in front, allowing a generous bit of white underwaist to be seen.

A touch characteristic of many of Mrs. Richard Trimble's gowns was the necktie and bow of black velvet ribbon tied closely at the base of the collar and the two longer ends of black velvet which hung lower down were knotted loosely and ended in silk tassels.

The skirt was cut on a circular model and was long and untrimmed. A belt of black satin was worn, and long white gloves.

Mrs. Richard Trimble's hat was not unlike Mrs. Henry S. Redmond's. It, too, had a straight round brim and was trimmed with flowers and big rosettes. The under brim was faced with black satin which gave a distinction it might otherwise have lacked.

Altogether she looked very sweet in her simple toilette and I heard her speaking French with an accent so Parisian that it made me quite envious. Of course when at Tuxedo one usually speaks French.

It is rather nice, I think, to have a note of individual taste in one's various costumes. A hint of one color running through the gowns of one's wardrobe, the constant wearing of a favorite flower—all these little things give an accent of individuality and count for far more than more elaborate planning.

Miss Edith Kane has a fondness for brown. She probably realizes how well it tones with her brown eyes and hair. You rarely see her without a touch of it somewhere about her frock.

At Tuxedo she wears gowns of white lingerie almost constantly, and with them a hat of brown and a large brown tulle chou.

It's uncommon, but it's characteristic and the effect is good.

Etiquette of a Widow's Wedding.

By BEATRICE K. PEMBERTON.

WITH regard to the garb of widows who are desirous of entering upon a second venture, however fashion may vary in the attire of the marriage of a maiden, it is unchanged in requiring that the widow-bride should wear a hat or toque, or even a bonnet, if her age be somewhat beyond mere maturity.

The wreath and veil are for the first marriage only. Nor does a widow-bride carry a bouquet, though she may wear real flowers in her dress, and often does.

She is not permitted to have bridesmaids, but is usually attended by a friend—who is, in everything but name, a bridesmaid—who stands behind the bride during the ceremony, and holds her prayer book and her glove if necessary.

The wedding ring of the previous marriage is not removed till the morning of the second bridal, and the widow should not wear her second engagement ring on the finger which is spanned by this wedding ring.

The widow bride is given away by her nearest male relative (sometimes, but not often, by her mother), and the routine of the ceremony and reception is exactly the same as that of an ordinary wedding It is not unusual for a relative of the first husband to give her away

In regard to marriages in general, irrespective of whether the bride is a widow or a maid, it is the time-honored prerogative of the bride to name the wedding day and most brides show favor for Summer marriages. The day of the week is sometimes an important consideration, especially to the superstitious, who recall the old rhyme:

"Monday for health,
Tuesday for wealth,
Wednesday best day of all;
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
And Saturday no luck at all."

The last doleful prophecy does not seem to affect society brides at all, as Saturday is the favored day for royal and society weddings. More ordinary and humble individuals show a preference for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The superstitious ones may further care to follow the advice given in an old Scotch couplet, which says she should wear—

"Something old, something new,
Something borrowed, something blue."

Another couplet is climatic in reference
"Happy is the bride that the sun shines on."
And the next may be called etymological:
"Who changes her name and not her letter, Marries for worse and not for better."

There are brides who feel assured of every sort of good luck if only, on their wedding day, they can manage to walk or drive a few steps after a funeral. This eccentric idea is of a very dismal character, rather akin to gamblers who think it very lucky to get a bit of rope with which some criminal has been hanged, or anything that has once belonged to a suicide. It is difficult to imagine how such ghastly ideas originate.

Every one is supposed to arrive before the bride, and her bridesmaids await her inside the door, ranged in the order in which they are to follow her up the aisle.

The order of coming and going to and from the church is the following The bride's mother drives to church a few minutes before her daughter, unless she is giving the bride away, in which case the mother drives with her. But it is more usual, should the father be dead, or unable from illness or absence to give his daughter away, for the next nearest male relative to do so in his place. The eldest brother, if available, gives the bride away, or an uncle, or an old friend of the family may do so.

When the bride is married in her traveling dress, her attendants are also attired in suitable gowns of the same type, care being taken here to keep a picturesque effect in style and coloring. Children, as far as possible, should be quaintly attired in frocks that enhance their childish charm

The bride, as she is the last to arrive, is the first to leave the church, driving off with the bridegroom. Next the bride's father drives off with the bridegroom's mother, then follow the bride's mother with the bridegroom's father, so that the respective parents are at home to welcome the guests. This is quite English. When they are gone, the bridesmaids are handed into the carriages by the ushers—the best man, of course, playing cavalier to the maid of honor.

It is not necessary for the bride's family to provide carriages for the guests, except the bridesmaids, but many do so.

The length of the honeymoon has greatly altered of late Instead of a month, it has sometimes dwindled down to two or three days. In one case a bride of Tuesday was present at the marriage of a bride on the following Saturday! A happy couple who are genuinely in love with each other do not find a month of tete-a-tete solitude too long.

Many changes have taken place of late in the fashion of weddings Tears, for instance, are now considered quite dowdy, whereas they used to be invited and encouraged, perhaps as necessary evidence that amidst all the fuss and frivolity of millinery preparations the solemnity of the occasion was not quite lost sight of.

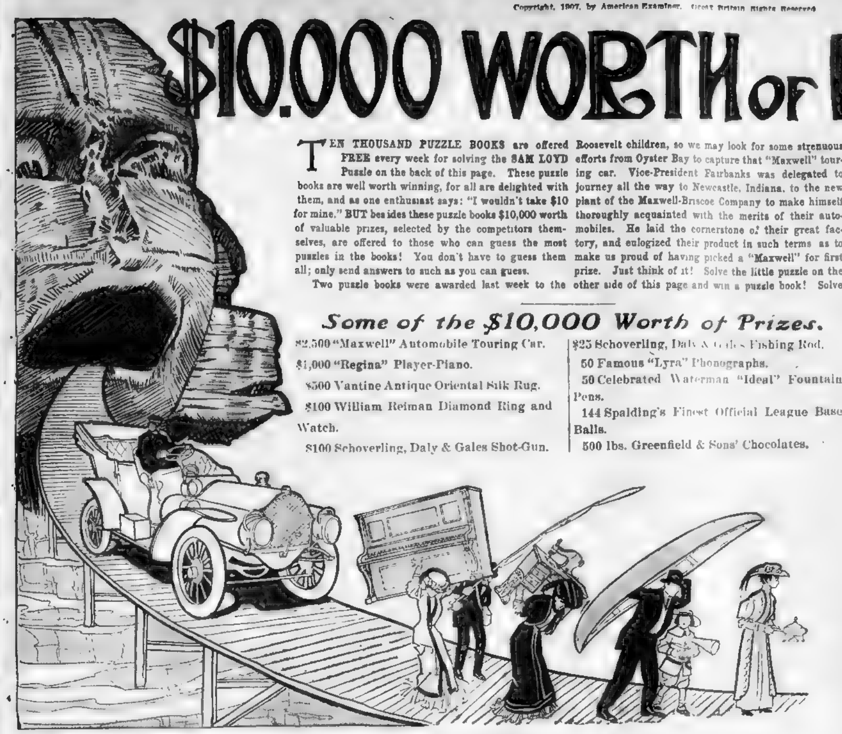
$10,000 WORTH OF PRIZES



TEN THOUSAND PUZZLE BOOKS are offered FREE every week for solving the SAM LOYD Puzzle on the back of this page. These puzzle books are well worth winning, for all are delighted with them, and as one enthusiast says: "I wouldn't take $10 for mine." BUT besides these puzzle books $10,000 worth of valuable prizes, selected by the competitors themselves, are offered to those who can guess the most puzzles in the books! You don't have to guess them all; only send answers to such as you can guess.

Two puzzle books were awarded last week to the Roosevelt children, so we may look for some strenuous efforts from Oyster Bay to capture that "Maxwell" touring car. Vice-President Fairbanks was delegated to journey all the way to Newcastle, Indiana, to the new plant of the Maxwell-Briscoe Company to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the merits of their automobiles. He laid the cornerstone of their great factory, and eulogized their product in such terms as to make us proud of having picked a "Maxwell" for first prize. Just think of it! Solve the little puzzle on the other side of this page and win a puzzle book! Solve the puzzles in the puzzle book and win a "Maxwell" touring car! Win the "Maxwell" and you are on the road to win against anything.

If you are musically inclined, win that "Regina" player-piano! It is indorsed by musical critics and mechanical experts as a gem and a marvel. It is THE coming piano. The prize of a Vantine silk Persian rug, worth $500, is too exquisitely beautiful to be described in print. All who have seen it say it is worthy of adorning an Oriental palace.

The sportsmen are jubilant over the chance to win the Schoverling, Daly & Gales $100 double-barrelled shotgun, as well as the twenty-five trout rods, as there are many who hope to have their names engraved upon these splendid trophies.

William Reiman, the Fifth avenue jeweller, who offers a special diamond ring as a ladies' prize, insists upon the terms that no gentleman shall compete unless he wishes to present the prize as an engagement ring, in which case there will be no charge for engraving her name in it. We have seen the watch he offers as another prize, and it is a beauty.

The Lyra phonographs speak for themselves, and are too well known to require further commendation. Like the American typewriter, it was selected from the standpoint of being the best of the reasonably priced machines on the market. Those who know the article say the selection was a [illegible].

The "Waterman Ideal" gives general satisfaction, of course; it always does. Those who win the fifty which we shall distribute for special cleverness and good writing, will know what it is to have a fountain pen they would not part with for the world.

The boys are all cheering for Father Chadwick and his genuine Spalding League balls, and it may be also said that the little tots as well as their mothers send their thanks to Miss Grace Margaret Gould for her suggestion of Greenfield & Son's famous pure chocolate sponge candy. From all directions comes the suggestion of books, books, books for prizes. We favored the selection in order to distribute prizes which would please the many, but had no idea that it would be so popular. A selected list comes to us, however, in such a peculiar or rather mysterious manner that it is withheld for a week to investigate a surprising communication.

The Proper Way to Give a Really Smart Picnic.

By Mrs. Linda Hull Larned,
Author of "The Hostess of To-day."

THE etiquette of the picnic would seem to be a paradox, for it has always been considered the one form of social amusement utterly free from conventionality. One of the chief charms of a day's outing in the woods or by the water is its freedom from the trammels of modes and manners. Any how and any way short of positive impropriety is seemingly the code of behavior for those who would thoroughly enjoy the picnic.

But the smart, up-to-date picnic of fashionable folk, though an affair of freedom, fun and frolic, is nevertheless more or less of a function and as such it should be given the consideration demanded by the sticklers for good form.

The etiquette of the picnic begins with the list of who is to be selected, for it is not always a spontaneous, simultaneous outbreak. Some one always thinks of it first, and either proposes it to her special coterie, or sends out invitations to a selected few to be her guests or join in the expedition. It is usually a sort of "Dutch treat;" but even then it may be the most exclusive of functions, but none the less jolly for its exclusiveness.

In choosing the place for a picnic it is well to remember that the one spot to be avoided is where other people go. The ordinary picnic ground is an abomination, except for those to whom the public picnic is a blessed day of freedom from daily toil. Those who really love nature and can afford to be exclusive should select a retired spot, carpeted with fresh, green grass, canopied with leaves and environed by a charming bit of scenery, as well as a spring, lake or [illegible].

"Sends out invitations to a selected few."

In choosing the participants it is well that they be nearly of the same age and tastes, and sufficiently robust to enjoy the discomforts, although the lame and the lazy may now be taken to the picnic in their automobiles, and there is no more delightful way of getting there.

Usually in each family the female portion thereof takes her share of the provender—not just the amount and variety she expects to consume, but enough of one or two things for the entire party. The originator and her lieutenants will arrange this to the satisfaction of everybody. For instance, one person will furnish all the chicken, another the salad, another the breadstuffs and sandwiches, another the drinks—this is usually a man, if the drinks are of that kind—and yet another the sweets and the cakes and the pie. Don't forget the pie, for a fresh fruit pie tastes better and is better if freshly made and carefully carried than any other picnic food known to man. The one who takes the drinks should never be invited again if he forgets to take the corkscrew.

Dressing for the picnic is a matter that occasionally weighs heavily on the feminine mind. She, whoever she may be, is going to look well if looking well does not interfere with her comfort. But to be comfortable and yet look well to the finish is a difficult matter for the average woman to accomplish.

Now that short skirts and tub dresses are the vogue—and they are so trim and dainty—it is not an impossibility to begin fresh and neat and to stay fresh and neat all day. The short, white pique or heavy linen dress is the most suitable, although it will soil easily. A woman, no matter how old she is unfortunate enough to be, looks better in white than in anything else in the clothes line, and it is especially effective with the background of woods and green grass and leaves. The white or light shirt waist that goes with this, with the ubiquitous chiffon veil of white or delicate tint.

"The one who takes the drinks should never be invited again if he forgets the corkscrew."

She, of course, should wear thick-soled shoes, but they must be well fitting and not in the least shabby. There should be no frills and furbelows, or lace trimmed petticoats to catch and tear, although the neck and headgear may be daintily attractive. She will take a long, fairly thick, plain cloak to protect her should it suddenly grow cold or rain. She or her escort will also take a lap rug or a pillow or two just for comfort and cleanliness when sitting on the grass. Men need not be told what to wear. They will make themselves comfortable in their every day clothes or flannels or ordinary golf togs.

If the originator of the picnic prefers to furnish all of the refreshments, making it his party, so to speak, an offer to do something to help should always be forthcoming upon receipt of the invitation, unless it be an extremely formal one. An invitation to a picnic should be treated as any other courtesy extended—accepted or declined as soon as possible. But it is usually such an informal affair that it does not call for a visit of digestion. Digestion in the open air is a foregone conclusion.

Nevertheless, if one accepts the invitation of another, even to a picnic, such hospitable intent should be recognized by an invitation to something of one's own giving afterward. Every one "pays back" somehow or some way in the particular coin of social life. While the picnic possesses the charm of the unexpected, the unconventional, nevertheless it is more or less a society function.

The picnic in these days is by far more of a function than it used to be when many of us were young. The picnic hamper of to-day bears not the slightest resemblance to the basket we used to carry a decade or so ago. We have grown so fine or so "finicky" that it requires the ingenuity of an experienced chef to "fill the bill" for this modern function if any degree of smartness is essayed. And yet we go, in spite of all the trouble and expense, for a day spent out of doors with congenial company in some delightfully rural spot far from the crowd.

A wonderful hamper has been invented, for those who can afford such luxuries. It may be seen in all its glory at any of our house furnishing shops, so it is unnecessary for me to describe it. And yet it is not the hamper which makes or mars the picnic. It is what goes into it. We will concern ourselves then only with such provender as will best grace and fit the occasion and yet avoid the ordinary things that go to fill the average picnic basket. The hard boiled eggs, cold boiled ham, baked beans, pickles and layer cake of long ago has been superseded by more delectable messes—and yet messiness is the one thing to guard against no matter how savory the viands may be. For instance, if layer cake be taken—and some of the new kinds are delicious—there must not be much of it, and that little should be wrapped in wax paper and packed with plenty of tissue paper in small, round hat boxes—the kind men's straw hats come in.

The providential housekeeper and prospective picnicker will provide herself with plenty of wooden dishes and plates, Japanese napkins, wax paper and numerous sizes of tin boxes with close fitting covers. These may be saved after the using of their contents—baking powder, crackers, candied ginger and bonbons. Also the ordinary cans [illegible] pints and quarts, and the jelly glass are to be saved. The little jars that chemists use are worth saving for picnic purposes. Cheap knives, forks and spoons are also a necessity for they are [illegible] when throwing away debris. Picnickers should be cautioned, however, against leaving any debris to mar the enjoyment of those who come next.

The Sweetbread Loaf is made like a veal loaf, substituting sweetbreads for half of the veal, or even using less of the veal.

After cleaning the fish one should put a piece of butter inside of it with a dusting of salt and pepper. The Good That Home Roof Gardens Will Do.

THE physically defective persons who hang about the streets of our great cities all the year round and in the Summer time swarm on the country roads, form a woeful spectacle, and social reformers are agreed that nothing should be left undone which may promise a way of coping with this evil.

As it is obvious that any scheme of this kind must have the proper upbringing of city children for its principal feature, Dr. James Dunbar-Brunton has suggested that much would be done toward improving the health and physical condition of the juvenile population if all the houses in the poorer quarters in all towns were provided with flat roofs which might be used as playgrounds and might be beautified with trees and flowers in tubs and pots.

Going more into details, he would have every municipal government insist that when houses were built for the poor in long rows undetached [illegible] should have flat roofs. These would be protected by a parapet, and the children would be safe from straying or accident. These [illegible] of the health department of each large city. They would be free playgrounds, costing but little. Each roof should have a covered part where [illegible] children could find shelter [illegible]

He further recommends that for every street or series of small streets a light hospital should be erected on one of these roofs. Not only would this [illegible] have its usefulness in providing a place for the sick children, but an equally important service would be offered if the weaker or deformed children could be allowed to play by themselves and thus give special attention [illegible] by themselves and thus special [illegible] be given so that the weak would become strong.

EVE AND THE TOAD

WHEN Satan was conquered and locked up with all his demons, he wanted revenge. He could not hope to conquer the power that sent him down to the Infernal Regions. But he heard that a world had been created, a man and a woman put on it to live happily, and he decided that he might make a comfortable abode for himself by conquering that world, incidentally venging himself on Goodness by destroying man.

His journey from the Infernal Regions to earth by way of the sun and other stars was exciting. He entered Paradise, he assumed various cunning disguises—fearing that watchful angels above might see him and spoil his plan.

He listened near to Adam and Eve in the darkness: "Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve," so Milton tells us. It's a graphic picture, interesting in its primitive credulity. The goodness of our original mother almost overcame our enemy with the horns and the tail.

> "Abash'd the Devil stood,
> And felt how awful goodness is, and > Virtue in her shape how lovely."

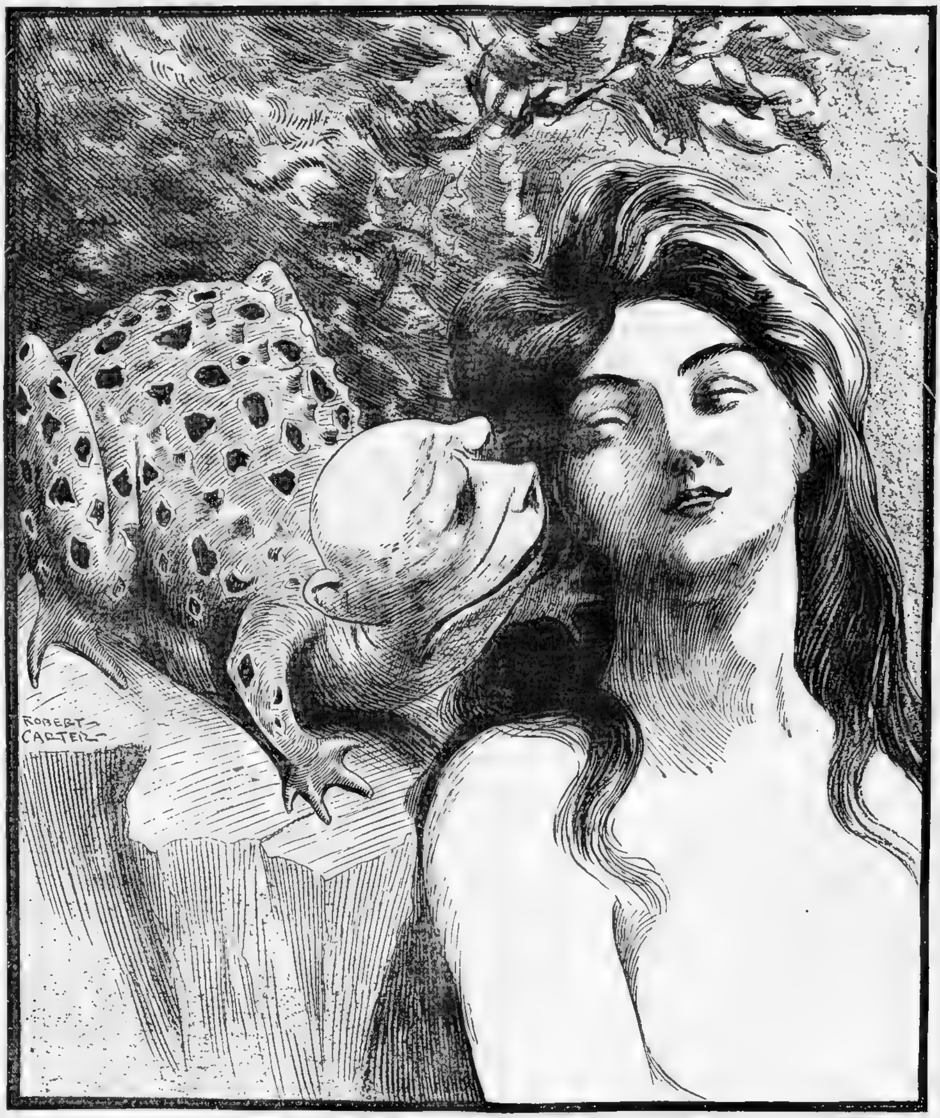
But beauty and goodness did not save poor Eve. The Devil took the form of a snake, walked proudly along upon the tip of his tail—as snakes did in those days before they were condemned to crawl on their bellies for Satan's sin—and ultimately accomplished poor Eve's downfall. Adam fell with her and made a most awful fuss about it. He did not show a tenth of Eve's courage, but whined and blamed her then, just as he does now.

That's all of Milton.

* * *

This picture is drawn and printed to attract your attention. It was suggested by Judge Gaynor, who in a public speech at Judge Keogh's interesting forum at New Rochelle described Rockefeller debauching the railroads of this country—comparing the railroads to Eve and Rockefeller to the toad close at her ear.



The Devil Disguised Himself in an Early Visit to Paradise—So Says Milton. We Have Some Toads for Our Industrial Eves Still

The story told by the wise, bald toad, Rockefeller, to the railroad Eve was the story that other big corporation toads have been telling to other public corporations for many years in this country.

Rockefeller threatened, promised and argued—that was before he had the thousand millions. Those that served him got all his business, those that did not were boycotted. He not only made the railroads charge others more than they charged him, but he actually made the railroads give back to him money received from other oil men — THE INDEPENDENT MAN'S DESTRUCTION WAS INEVITABLE.

* * *

The purpose of this editorial is to impress on readers the fact that American business men, workers, farmers and citizens generally are becoming less and less INDEPENDENT, partly because they have been showing LESS INDEPENDENCE IN THEIR ACTS AS CITIZENS AND VOTERS.

The powerful men that hate independent thought in this country and independent voting have always united, worked and fought together.

They have known what they wanted—they wanted to crush the independent citizen and business man—and they have crushed him.

The great industrial enterprises of the country are monopolies—any individual starting out in those lines for himself independently would be looked upon almost as a maniac. He would have no chance of survival whatever.

The story of the corporation toad has been told over and over, and effectively. The great necessities in industry, in all departments of human effort, have been seized, cornered and made the basis of trust operations. The INDEPENDENT man has become more and more feeble. He is more and more realizing that a clerkship is about the best that he can hope for in place of old-time independence.

* * *

To oppose the corporations, and the corporation-owned parties that have united to exploit and destroy independent men, THE INDEPENDENT MEN MUST UNITE FOR THEIR OWN PROTECTION.

It must be perfectly clear to voters in this country that independence of thought, independence of interest, require AN INDEPENDENT PARTY TO GIVE THEM EXPRESSION.

The Independence League has been started and is being extended all over the United States in order that men who think independently, and who want to VOTE independently, may come in contact with each other and act together.

* * *

What the smooth toad Satan did for poor Adam and Eve, the modern corporation toad has done very effectively for the Democratic and Republican parties.

At the ear of the Democratic party there squats a toad, saying: "Listen to me and you'll be prosperous. Listen to me and you'll have money for your campaigns. Look after me and I'll look after you."

The twin brother of that toad has long squatted at the ear of the Republican party, saying the same things.

The Republican machine and the Democratic machine are simply the paid and controlled tools of the modern tempting toads, the great trusts.

When the lists of candidates are made up, Republicans and Democrats, it doesn't make a bit of difference to the trusts whether you make your cross in the Democratic circle or in the Republican circle on the official ballot—you are voting for the trusts anyhow.

Whether you vote for the Democrat that the trusts picked out or for the Republican that the trusts picked out makes not the least difference. The Republican trust candidate may be a little more shameless than the Democratic trust candidate, or vice versa, but both will obey orders only MORE OR LESS shamelessly.

* * *

The country has got to have a new party. The independent men who see the possibilities of independence success becoming daily fewer have got to unite to assert and vindicate the rights of the individuals that should make up the national government.

Does any man who reads this honestly believe that HE has anything to say about the actual government of this country, the selection of candidates? Is he not told on a certain date that he must vote for this Democrat or this Republican, and doesn't he know that machine politicians owned by the trusts have nominated them both?

All things become rusty and corrupt with time, and political parties and machines are not exceptions to this rule. The two great political parties of the United States have fallen under the same corrupting influence. The leader in either party who professes opposition to trust power is looked upon as a joke, even by the people in his own party.

An independent party, an independent political movement to be made up of business men, farmers, mechanics and all that believe in the right of THE INDEPENDENT CITIZEN to play a part in the national government, should combine with their votes to teach Republican and Democratic machine politicians united under the trust banner a lesson of which they are badly in need.

And loll in idle ease;

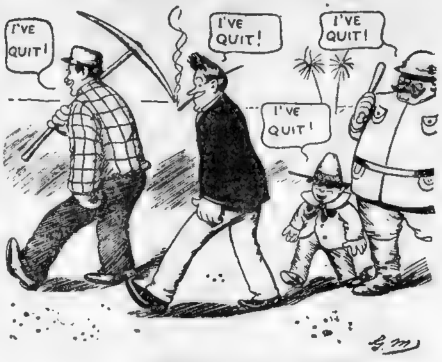
SUMMER LUNACY

It doesn't matter whether it is torrid, horrid weather
With the sun's rays beating on you like the rain,
And a sticky, thick solidity about the high humidity,
You always know when Summer comes again
The days may be as airy as they are in January,
The mercury may not be on the climb;
But when a swift insanity lays hold on all humanity,
You know it is the good old Summertime.

When a person with the habits commonly ascribed to rabbits
Leaps upon an inoffensive Subway guard
With a clear intent to knock off his right ear or beat his block off,
He has got his Summer madness rather hard
When you feel within you stealing an exasperated feeling
That disposes you to violence and crime
For which you can give no reason, you may bet it is the season
That the poet calls the good old Summertime

Then it is that [illegible] divorces through the papers run their courses
Men abandon friends and fortunes, homes and wives
Something in the air engenders the desire to youthful spenders
To make haste to wreck the remnants of their lives
It's the lazy, lackadaisy, hazy air that drives us crazy,
We're hopeless paranoiacs till Fall,
When mental inebriety and utter impropriety
Afflicts us of a sudden—it's Summertime, that's all



I'VE QUIT!
I'VE QUIT!
I'VE QUIT!
I'VE QUIT!

Home, Dis Veek.

MEIN LIEBER LOOEY—Ve haf receifed Shrewsbury und ve vas glat to know your letter from Leedle Neck-on-der-Shrewsbury und ve vas glad to know dot your [illegible] vas full mit enchoyment, eggsceitement und muskitto bites.

Ve vas all vell at home mit der eggsception dot most of us vas now slowly getting a conwalessence from der glorious Fort' of Chuly.

How dit you spent der Fort', Looey?

"PRESENTED ME MIT A ROMAN CANDLE VICH REACHED ME BETWEEN DER THIRD BUTTON ON MY VESTCOAT UND DER SOLO APPOPLEXUS."

Dit you n[illegible] set [illegible] chiant fire-crickers re[illegible] of de [illegible] of your forehead yust to get a laugh from your young lady friends, or dit you lay a leedle finger, an' elbow or a cubble of kennuckles on der altar of patriotics?"

Ve hat a nice time on der Fort' here at home, Looey, mit der eggsception dot leedle Oscar Bauers [illegible] from der next door presented me mit a roman candle vich reached me between der third button on my vestcoat und der solo appoplexus. I acknowledged der receipt by falling off der front steps und barking my [illegible].

You should always remember, Looey, dot der Fort' is der day ven your patriotistic voice should [illegible] ould of your t'orax und make der [illegible] ring, but it ain'd necesserary to get up a [illegible] between a stick of dynamite und a keg of [illegible] powder to prove dot you laff out [illegible] Freedom.

You [illegible] find dot some of our best citizens—men [illegible] liberty mit a eferlasting luff—vas hiding in der cellar mit both hands ofer deir ears from Chuly third to Chuly fifth.

Ve hat a quiet time at home on der Fort' mit der eggsception dot your leedle brother Leopold tried to explode a toy cannon und removed der apex of his t'umb und abouid half of der dining room vindow.

It may be necessary to celebration der birth of Freedom by bursting forth into noise, but my idea is dot Old Glory would like it better if ve vas more subdued und kept our children on der earth instead of letting dem go up in der air in small fragments.

Ve hat a quiet time at home, Looey, on der Fort' mit der eggsception of your Uncle Hans Shauerbath, vich drank seferal mint chuleps und vent to sleep on der front porch mit five packs of fire crackles in his coat pocket.

Full mit der spirit of liberty your interesting brother, Wilhelm, set fire to your uncle's pocket und ven last seen your Uncle Hans vas rushing ofer hill und dale in der cheneral direction of Hartford, Conn., mit der fire crackles cheering him on.

Liberty, Looey, is der only real ding in dis vorld for a nation, but yust vy der glorious cause of Freedom should be slapped in der face mit a imitation of der bombardment of Port Arthur is someding vich I must haf misconstrued.

Ve hat a quiet time at home on der Fort', Looey, mit der eggsception dot your leedle brother Wilhelm tied a chiant fire crackle to der cat's tail und der cat vent in der kitchen to have her eggsplosion.

It took two hours und sefen neighbors to get your mother ouid of der refrigerator, vich vas [illegible] selected for her by der catastrophe.

Der stove lost all der supper it contained. Wilhelm lost two eyebrows und his Buster Brown hair, der cat lost sefen of its lives, und der glorious cause of Freedom got a send-off dot could be heard for nineteen miles.

Ve hat a quiet time at home on der Fort' mit der eggsception dot somebody tolt Neighbor Engelbecker's leedle boy Ludwig dot if he vished to make a noise like a torpedo he should swallow a Seidlitz powder in instalments, vich he dit.

Leedle Ludwig made a noise all right, but der critics vas divided vedder dit it sound like a torpedo or a scream for er doctor, but, anyvay, vot efer der noise sounded like it helped svell der choyous chorus of Liberty efen eef leedle Ludwig's stomach got a setback vich puts it in der shredded hay class.

Ve all missed you, Looey, but maybe it is better you vas not at home on der Fort', because der doctor is occupying your room so dot he can be near der vounded, but udderwise ve vas all vell.

I dink, Looey, dot ven Freedom vas fairst inwented by Chorge Vashington his idea vas to make it someding quiet und modest vich he could keep abouid der house und look at efery vunce in a vile mitouid getting nervous prostrationment.

But Chorge forgot to leave full instructions und nowadays ven der Birthday of Freedom rolls around der impulsive American public vakes up at daylight, shoves up der bedroom vindow und begins to hurl torpedoes at der house next door because a noise in der air is vorth two noises on der quiet.

Ve hat a very peaceful Fort' at home, Looey, mit der eggsception of your cousin, Rudolph Beerhaben, vich attached himself to a hot-air balloon und ven last seen vas hovering ofer Paterson, N. J., und making signs to his parents not to vait supper for him.

Most of our neighbors for miles in efery direction hat sons und daughters missing, but vot could dey eggspect ven a child vill try to put a pound of powder in a gas pipe und den light der result mit a match?

Der Fort' is a great idea, but I dink dis is carrying it too far, as der leedle boy said ven he vent ofer der top of der house on der handle of a skyrocket.

Ve hat a very peaceful Fort' at home, Looey, mit der eggsception of our parlor, vich took fire ven your enthusinastic brother Wilhelm tried to make some Chapanese lanterns by setting fire to der lace curtains.

Der firemen put ouid der fire und most of our furniture. our brother vas also very much put ouid ven I spanked him.

Vot I vould vish to see inventioned for der glorious Fort', Looey, is some canned noise, so you could open it or not, according to der extent of your headache.

Yours mit luff,
D. DINKELSPIEL,

Gold-Wearied Multi-Millionaires.

By Prof. Emil Reich

AT Berlin they say that money alone does not mean happiness, the point being to have it first. Not so the Americans and other multi-millionaires. They say to have money is nothing; the point is to get rid of it. The question arises, Do the multi-millionaires really mean it?

When Mr. Charles M. Schwab, the former president of the Steel Trust, declares that all he yearns for is the "simple life," and that he used to be much happier in his former poor days, are such statements an expression of a real desire or only the poutings of a depressed mind?

The multi-millionaires are a new species in the evolution of man. Linnaeus called man Homo Sapiens. What shall we call the multi-millionaire—Homo sapientissimus? He himself is, as we learn, likely to call himself Homo Insapiens. Surely a person completely raised above all the needs and worries of other people lives in an atmosphere so peculiar that he must inevitably become a new creature. His psychology is new, unknown, barely guessed at by himself. Hence the frequency of self-deception among multi-millionaires. All his ideals were taught him by teachers or authors who had never met or observed a multi-millionaire. Between his mentality as a multi-millionaire and his intellectual and emotional machinery as an ordinary mortal there is a crying discrepancy. Just consider the following strange fads of some multi-millionaires: Take, for instance, Mr. Carnegie. He has up to this date spent some twenty million pounds sterling, it is said, on the indiscriminate purchase of books for public libraries. A few years ago I proposed to him, through articles in a contemporary journal, to make at least some choice among books. My proposal was that Mr. Carnegie should pay three hundred great scholars who, in groups of ten, should each draw up a critical list of the really useful books in one of the thirty different branches of knowledge. Three hundred thousand pounds would amply suffice for that great purpose, but Mr. Carnegie, who was approached by Mr. John Morley, brusquely refused to countenance it. What he wants is to indulge in his fad. His fad is books for public libraries.

Now, in this case, the psychology of the matter seems quite clear. In former times kings, or the multi-millionaires of that age, had fools to amuse them. The official post of king's (or multi-millionaire's) fool is at present not quite feasible, so since fools proper can no longer be engaged and employed, the modern kingly multimillionaire takes a fad instead.

Their fad is their king's fool. See how that explains everything beautifully. Any new proposal made to a multi-millionaire anent his fad is like suggesting to King Francis I. of France to change his fool. It is aggravating to him; it almost insults him. When I made my proposal to Mr. Carnegie I had not yet completed my study of kings' fools. That's why I failed.

History is indeed a precious means of penetrating more deeply into the psychology of multi-millionaires. For instance, their alleged love of simple life, their alleged contempt of money, their alleged longing for the early poverty.

What is it all but a reminiscence of the rage that, among other cases, took hold of all Italy in 1233, when rich people threw away their belongings (or said they did), and in keeping with the religious spirit of the times turned penitent, mendicant friars. As great knowledge is ever charmed by naive ignorance, as Faust is bewildered with passion for simple Marguerite, so great wealth ever had a secret longing for the austere delights of self-abnegation.

To the present day most of the members of the severest orders of monks are men who had formerly enjoyed ample fortunes.

Poverty is a severe order by itself and does not need the habit of a monk. One can, therefore, quite understand that the modern multi-millionaires, like Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Thomas F. Ryan, are subject, from time to time, to fits of Weltflucht (or world flight), as the Germans call it; and it would not altogether be impossible to establish a Grande Chartreuse for multi millionaires somewhere in the wilds of the mountains near the St. Gothard in Switzerland.

Imagine Mr. Carnegie and all the other multi millionaires clad in monkish costumes, spending their days and much of their nights in unremitting meditation on the inanities of the world. Imagine what an "attraction" that would form! Fancy the special trains bringing in hundreds of thousands of tourists to the St. Gothard, there to watch the multi-millionaires in their penitent dress!

Fancy the excellent copy it would furnish and the pictures: "Carnegie starving!" "Ryan begging for bread in the ravines!" "Mr. Rockefeller feeding on earth worms!" It is to be hoped that the new Carthusians or Maltesans will in the end brew us a new and still better Chartreuse.

And then the St. Gothard is so comfortably near the Lake of Como! Any multi millionaire who got tired of the Grande Chartreuse—might he not disappear a little to the shores of the villa-studded lake and to gay Milan?

It is a lovely idea. What fine emotional shivers one could produce oneself! A month in the wilds of the St. Gothard, and then suddenly a plunge into the exuberant life of Milan!

Mirandy on Longevity.

By Dorothy Dix

"BLESS Gord," exclaimed Mirandy, "for a man lak dat Doctor Wiley down dere in Washington. I don't know whedder he's married or not, but ef I was a widder woman, or one of dese heah ladies whut belongs to de fo' hundred, whar you don't have to tie yo'self down to one husband, I sho'ly would set my cap at him.

"My, but hit's a comfort to even run acrost a man lak him dat has got real good, hard horse sense, an' dat says dat de way to be healthy an' happy an' live to be a hundred is to eat whut you wants, cooked de way you laks hit, an' not worry 'bout givin' hit more dan a lick an' a promise when you chaws hit.

"Dem words suttinly did comfort me, becaze de things dat I is suffered at de hands of a man whose name I won't mention, even ef he is my [illegible], dat's got de health craze, would make a book dat would make dat story dat Br'er Jenkins is got 'bout de pussicutions of de Early Christian Martyrs sound lak an account of a picnic an' bobbycue. Yassum, you mark my words, de day is comin' when all dat a man or a woman is got to do to git a divorce an' alimony is jes to drag de partner of deir bosom into de court, an' prove on 'em dat dey is got dis heah hygene bug a-buzzin' arund in deir bonnets.

"Considerin' dat mos' folks lives longer dan dey has any fun deirselfs, an' a lot longer dan odder folks wants 'em to, I don't see why dey is so set on not dyin'. As far as I kin see, lingerin' on when you gits ole is lak settin' on at a table whar you done et up all de dinner, an' de candles is burned down to deir sockets, an' all de good company is done got up one by one an' stole away, an' de waiters is a-standin' behind yo' cheer lookin' at you sort of cross-eyed, an' wonderin' why you aint got de decency to go an' make room for somebody else.

"AN' AS FAR AS I IS CONCERNED, I HOPES WHEN I GITS DAT WAY DAT I WON'T TARRY LONG."

"An' as far as I is concerned, I hopes when I gits dat way dat I won't tarry long an' when I gits to de pint whar I tells de same story over to ev'ybody dat comes along an' ev'ything I heer reminds me of somethin' dat happened befo' de war, I humbly trust dat one of dese Mikes dat de doctors is always prognosticatin' 'bout will come along an' git me.

"But dat ain't de way wid Ike. He says dat whilst Heaven is his home he ain't in no hurry to take possession of his mansion in de skies, an' dat he'd ruther stay here on dis earth, whar he is acquainted an' acclimated, an' I 'spons dat I 'specks dat he's right, an' dat ef I was a man whut 'scorted anodder woman to de ice cream saloon an' bought her chocolate ice cream, an' soda, an' cake, whilst I had a wife at home wrastlin' wid pork chops, dat I wouldn't take any risks on de future nuther.

"Howsomever dat is, Ike says dat de las' thing dat he intends to do is to die, so, bein' as he is a jiner, he was one of de charter members of de Century Club dat is done took a vow to live along an' pester deir families for a hundred years—an' a mo' onrighteous, onchristian, onfeelin' society, in my opinion, was never started. Lawd, when I looks around an' sees Sis Tempy dats got to put up for a hundred years wid de oneryness of Br'er Ben—which is one of dese men whut never smokes, nor drinks, nor runs around at night, nor says a pleasant word at home—I don't wonder dat she's took on sort of a forlorn an' weevily look. Hits enough to break de spirits of anybody.

"An' I can't say dat I'm none chirked up myself. Not dat I wants to git rid of Ike. Dat is, ordinarily, but I don't know nothin' dat would reconcile you to de Lawd's will in removin' a pusson lak havin' 'em a-settin' up wid one hand on deir pulse an' de odder on dir stomachs, an' deir conversation tied down so fast to prognosticatin' 'bout whut is good for 'em, an' whut is bad for 'em dat dey don't take no interest in de doin's of de neighbors, nor de smart things dat de baby said, nor de comfort of de po', hard worked wife dat's kept on de jump tryin' to provide 'em wid de things dat somebody has done said dat ef dey eats hit'll make 'em live forever, an' dat de wife is hopin' will pisen 'em.

"Dat's Ike, an' dat's ev'y odder man dat's a health crank, an' you'll notice dat when you reads in de papers 'bout de oldest inhabitant passin' away at last hit generally winds up by sayin' dat he is mourned by his fo'th wife, for he's most always killed off three odders a-waitin' on him whilst he was takin' keer of hisself. Yassum, dat's so. When you heer of dese men whut's got de crank 'bout sleepin' out of doors you don't heer nothin' 'bout de wife dat has to lug out de mattresses an' de blankets at night an' tote 'em in in de mawnin', or when you listens to a man brag 'bout how he never lets anything keep him from exercisin' of a mawnin' wid Indian clubs and dumb bells he don't say nothin' 'bout de woman dat fetched 'em to him an' put 'em away when he was done, but dere's always a little frazzled out woman a-doin' hit.

"I wouldn't mind de curious peculiarities of de eatin' ef dey would always stick to de same thing, but one day dey's found dat de never-say-die remedy is one thing, an' de nex' day hits somethin' else. One day when I puts salt in de biskit Ike passes 'em up wid a sorrerful shake of de haid, as he says, 'Mirandy, don't you know dat salt dries up de blood, which am de current of life, an' dat ef you don't want to be took off in de flower of yo' youth you mus' never use hit.'

"De nex' day when I is done lef' out de salt, an' ev'ything tastes as flat as dish water, he says, 'Woman, don't you know dat de great diskiverer of de live-for-ever theory of life is salt?'

"An' hit's de same way 'bout cookin' vittles an' not cookin' 'em. One day Ike has us a-gnawin' on some nuts an' carrots lak we was white rabbits or ginney pigs, becaze we is gwine back to nature, an' de nex' day he has us a-fryin' beefsteak to a cinder in order to kill de tape worms an' odder reptiles an' germs dat he say lives in oncooked food an' dat has to be biled to death.

"An' hit all comes to nothin' in de end as far as I kin see. Dem whut takes keer of deirselves an' worries over ev'y mouthful dies, an' dem whut don't take keer of deirselves lives along, an' hit's des as broad as hit's long.

"Dere's Br'er Simeon, whut is way up in de nineties, an' has got all of his faculties yit, an' when I goes to see him an' I axes him how he is lived so long he says:

"'Sis Mirandy, I 'tributes my long life an' de health I is enjoyin' to de fact dat I is lived sech a temperate life. I is always took keer of myself. I is always got up early in de mawnin' an' gone to roost wid de chickens, an' bin keerful 'bout my diet, an' I ain't never overworked myself, an' I ain't never touched tobacco nor liquor.'

"Dat sounds moughty good an' lak he's done found out de secret of how to live long, but befo' I begins to leave off de things I enjoys doin' an' cut out de dishes dat I laks I steps acrost de street to Br'er Abraham, whut is a year older dan Br'er Simeon, an' I axes him how hit is dat he's been tarryin' in dis vale of sorrer so long.

"'Sis Mirandy,' 'spons he, 'de secret of a long life is havin' a good time. I is always et de bes' I could git, an' as much of hit as I could hold, an' I is turned night into day, an' day into night, an' wuked hard an' played hard, an' I is lived to be ninety-eight years ole, but ef you counts de fun I is had I'se a million.'

"An' dar you is. You pays yo' money, an' you take yo' choice. An' de reason dat dese health food cranks thinks dat dey live longer dan odder folks is dat dey has sech a doleful time dat hit seems dat dey lives longer. An' furthermo' hit look lak to de people dat has to live wid 'em dat de Lawd is forgotten 'em, an' dat dey never is goin' to die."

INTRODUCTION

"If I had Doctor Crockett's voice I could stand on my back porch in Nebraska and talk to the people of Maine, any time they desired to hear me. How fortunate it is that there are men with hearts that beat for the people; and with a brain to formulate their ideas and a voice to speak to the people: A man needs a voice like Doctor Crockett's to call sinners to repentence in Maine."

THE PLUNDERER—A Political Story of Maine, Exposing the Piratical System and Explaining the Remedy. By George Langtry Crockett, M. D., Ex-Member of the Democratic State Committee of Maine. Pp. 272. The J. K. Waters Company, Boston. One Dollar.

This book, the publishers announce, will be out July 15. And when it reaches Maine look out for a trembling of the earth!

On the back of the neatly printed volume there is a picture of a very fierce-looking pirate, armed with two horse pistols. When certain Maine men read Dr. Crockett's book, the Thomaston physician-author's friends agree, Dr. Crockett should lay in a small arsenal himself.

"The Plunderer" is the most remarkable exposure of political conditions that has yet appeared. Dr. Crockett speaks "right out in meetin'." He names and tells things that have happened. As a member of the State Democratic Committee he was on the inside on about all that took place in the big State.

Author Fearless Fighter

The book might very properly be called "The Confessions of a Political Boss." The man who wrote it decided to call it "The Plunderer."

It will be read with great interest, not only in Maine, but doubtless throughout the entire country.

The row that Winston Churchill's "Coniston" raised in New Hampshire was a tempest in a small teapot compared to what may be expected when "The Plunderer" goes on sale.

Dr. Crockett is one of the most fearless political fighters in the Pine Tree State. He has a voice that makes the great forests tremble when he speaks. His vocabulary is picturesque. He is a wonder in calling a spade by that name on the stump—and he keeps it up in his new book.

This is his dedication of the volume:

> "To my old shipmates, the crew of 'The Plunderer,' this volume is dedicated by the author, who served both before the mast and on the quarterdeck."

After showing up conditions as they are said to have been in Maine, Dr. Crockett declares that the remedy lies largely in breaking away from the old parties.

A pretty love story runs through the pages and ends happily.

The book contains sixteen chapters. It is the doctor's maiden effort as a book writer.

Morgan Political Boss

The political boss in the book is William Longdale Morgan. His daughter, Bernice, is the girl in the romance. She decided to teach school and Boss Morgan and Dr Baker, school superintendent, visited the school. This is the way the book puts what happened:

"GUESS we'll let your father ask the questions, Miss Morgan," said the accommodating Doctor.

"All right, Doc, what are they?" asked the boss.

"Geography," he replied.

Addressing the class Morgan said: "You will answer in rotation, commencing at the head."

"Who's Governor of Maine?" Answer, "The State House Ring."

"What's the Capitol of Maine?" Answer, "Maine Central Railroad."

"What's the government of Maine?" Answer, "Ring rule."

"To what country does Maine belong?" Answer, "The Trusts."

"How many counties in Maine?" Answer, "Sixteen."

"Name some of them." Answer, "Powers, Burleigh, Blanchard, Clark, Prescott, Murchie, Peaks."

"What's the principal business of Maine?" Answer, "Sending railroad lawyers to Congress."

"What's the leading import of Maine?" Answer, "Whiskey."

"What's the leading export of Maine?" Answer, "Good citizens for Massachusetts."

"What's the leading crop of Maine?" Answer, "Moral hypocrites."

"Which is the strongest political party in Maine?" Answer, "Mr. Money Cold Cash."

Haines for Governor.

"Eddy Burleigh, you go to the blackboard and do this sum. Fernald stands for enforcement, taxing of wild lands, and is endorsed by the Poland Sewing Circle; Haines stands for resubmission, repeal of the Sturgis law, abolishment of liquor agencies, so druggists, hotels and barrooms can sell, and is endorsed by the State House ring, which get the nomination in 1908 for Governor?"

Eddy triumphantly drew a horizontal line and wrote underneath, "William T Haines."

"Marvellous! A la Professor Hutchins," said Baker. "That boy, Bill, had ought to be exhibited in Austin & Stone's as the 'lightning calculator.'"

"Holman Day, you go to the board."

At working out intricate financial problems Holman afterwards proved to be the wonder of Maine, and invented a system of bookkeeping for the Ring.

His example was: "A town's State tax is $3,000; county tax is $1,500, and raises at its annual meeting $25,000 more; how can a farmer pay his taxes without working out on the roads?"

Holman by continuing his columns, transposing the total, dividing the subtrahend, shifting the figures, subtracting the quotient and letting X equal the unknown, found this answer: "Vote the Republican ticket."

"My little lady," said Morgan, nodding to Milly, "What's an island?"

Devotedly the little miss clasped her hands, raised her eyes to Heaven and solemnly answered, "God's most precious gift, a body of land surrounded by water."

"Miss Morgan, I congratulate you," exclaimed the doctor. "Your class in two weeks will be far enough advanced to hear Mr. Standish's lecture on the 'Reciprocity of Shakespeare and Bacon.'"

Bernice was elated, amazed, and said: "Why I thought he was in Europe, studying the English system of education."

"No!" informed the doctor, almost harshly, "he went there to count the number of staircases in the British Capitol for the Kennebec Journal."

Dr. Crockett has introduced a new "Throne Room" in fiction. It is called "The Boiler Room." This was in the county building of Kent County. Dr. Crockett lives in Knox County. He writes in his book:

THE janitor of the county building of Kent County was Winnie Blackthorn. Although he held numerous political offices, acted as the adviser of Sheriff Totman's staff of deputies, and was the Mayor's wet nurse, yet he had only one duty to perform, he must be on hand when the Grand Jury sat.

Underneath the county building were subterranean passages, granite vaults, cells, dark holes, rooms lighted through grated windows, and Winnie's den, the boiler room. What the office is to the business man, the capitol to the State, the throne room to the King, the headquarters to the army general, so was that boiler room to the boss.

Beneath Grand Jury Room

Above, it was bounded by the Grand Jury room, on the west by the Sheriff's room, on the north by the seized hard liquor room, on the south by the seized soft liquor room, and from the east entered the kings, potentates and satraps who ruled in the political empire of the modern Moloch.

There, during the meetings of the Grand Jury, sat the Boss. Whether by accident, or by device of man, the acoustic properties of the boiler room were perfect. One could easily hear the words spoken in the room above.

As Cerebus watched the gates of Hades, so Winnie guarded that political hell, his den, in order that nobody could intrude on the Boss while eavesdropping.

* * *

When the Legislatures met the Bosses convened. When the Grand Jury sat in the courthouse the Boss sat in the boiler room. When the Supreme Judge sat on the bench the politicians, like turkey buzzards, roosted about the courthouse.

The following may be considered as sample cases, in the average ring-ruled county of Maine:

Case No. 1.—James P. Farley holds a United States revenue liquor stamp, does business in Coburn. Instead of indicting him on the stamp, prima facie evidence, the County Attorney, this term of court, is going to indict him for common sale and nuisance, as the County Commissioners have refused the official his expenses to go to Portsmouth, where the United States keeps a record of such stamps. No other course is open to the County Attorney but to summon witnesses.

Leaving the grand jury room, he calls the court messenger and gives him a list of witnesses. The sheriff, in turn, accepts the list and enters his room, where the deputies are smoking and playing "smudge."

Beat Boston Retreat.

"Boys," calls the sheriff, "here's some summonses. The county attorney says he wants 'em served at once."

He orders, "Grant, here's one for you to serve on Burns of Kenton; Small, here's one for you to serve on Bradford of Rockford. Hall, here's one for you to serve on Bean of Coburn. Please do these quick."

These orders are overheard by the keyhole politicians who hang about the county building, and the turkey buzzards. Ere the deputies are on their way to their respective towns, the members of the Ring in each town have been informed of what has been heard. Nobody has violated the law, nobody would violate it. The wanted witnesses are in turn posted by the Ring. If one of them chances to be a man who can not be trusted, or is new to the game, he is given [illegible] to leave town until the Grand Jury rises.

Perhaps, a witness is captured, but on reaching the Grand Jury room he is apt to become forgetful. Oh! so forgetful! He may remember, however, that he purchased liquor of Farley last Fourth of July.

"Pay Us or the County"

The boss hears every word spoken while the testimony is being given. When the witness reaches home he is saluted as a "squealer" and a "cur" for telling. He knows he told, and now believes the whole world also knows his moral degradation. His best friends ignore him. His children at school are hounded; his fellow-workmen say they would have gone to jail before they told; and all of Farley's friends slur, sneer and poke fun at him.

In Maine it is considered the part of a gentleman not to remember who sold you rum, that is, when you are a witness before the grand jury.

Morgan now calls on the victim, sympathizes with him and says the best thing for him to do is to go to Boston for a few days. All Maine gentlemen, when it is convenient, have relatives in Boston.

Case [illegible] Farley is there with his attorney, who says his client is being persecuted by that corrupt Morgan. Case continued. Bail of $200 is furnished by anybody who owns a hencoop or a woodlot. From day to day the case is called, at last is continued to the next term, as the State cannot find its witnesses. The following term it is nol prossed as the State again has no evidence. If the public could see Morgan's charts they would learn that Farley gave $100 and four and [illegible] gallons to Morgan last campaign. Farley is one of those men who claims to be a Republican but votes for the party he thinks is going to win. He [illegible] holds a license by paying his money to the ring. For him to pay $500 to the State for a license would be entering into [illegible] with an evil, but if the present method is moral, one of the most moral men who ever lived was William L. Morgan.

Case No. 2.—William C Dicer does business in Coburn, but has no stamp. Morgan's charts would show that this man gave no money nor did any work for the Ring's tickets during the last campaign, therefore he must pay the State. All such business men must pay in some way, although it may not be in the direct cash system. If a hotel keeper, he may give away entertainment, if a barroom man he may treat the Ring and loan money to the political leeches. It is agreed by men in the liquor business that the cheapest and most convenient system is to pay the Boss.

"Them that don't pay us must pay the county," were the words of Morgan.

Edwin S. Cole enters the Grand Jury room.—Being a gentleman he remembers nothing and is excused.

S. K. Fox enters. Remembers, but can't tell when, and is excused.

Gardiner U. Pierce enters, is frightened, remembers and tells. The boss hears all of the testimony. When the indictment is found Morgan remarks to a lieutenant, "We don't know this feller." Later in the day Dicer pays a fine of $200 and costs. If he stays in the business he will learn the ropes of the plunderer and financially satisfy her captain, the boss.

Case No. 3.

Stephen Bouncer runs a hotel in Waverly and stands in with the ring. The temperance people have been swearing out warrants and doing all sorts of nonsensical things to close him. Several important witnesses are found, and he is indicted.

The Ring is surprised and alarmed to learn that all the witnesses are talking that they cannot lie under oath; they must tell the truth. It is not often that such resolutions are lived up to, in liquor cases especially, but the character of the men warranted the fears of the Ring.

When the case is called, Bouncer's lawyer has the certificate of a regular physician that his client is a sick man, so sick in fact that his health would be endangered by attending court.

The judge carefully listens to the lawyer's statement, then advises the county attorney, "Knowing that experts differ in judgment I think you had best send two physicians to examine the respondent."

Neither of these medical gentlemen are personally acquainted with said Bouncer. Billy Calderwood has a very bad cold and through Morgan's orders is placed in Bouncer's bed. The physicians enter the room where lies their patient. Billy knows his part, and also knows he is not under oath.

"Yes," he answers them, "I'm Mr Bouncer and I'm devilish sick. I've been taking glycerine and whiskey for this cold."

Two Rumsellers in Jail

The physical examination confirms the opinion of the man in Bouncer's bed. The report of the two physicians, which is a truthful statement as far as they know, is accepted by the court. Bouncer disappears from civilization, and Calderwood has the time of his life waiting for court to adjourn. Case continued to next term. Bradstreet for the defense.

Case No. 4.—Frank Bane has been indicted for common nuisance, has no stamp, sells beer and short lobsters at one of the beaches every Sunday. Bane is what is known as a good fellow, smart, popular, votes for the winners, and gave Morgan $50 for the last campaign.

The County Attorney is getting nervous, for the Gazette is printing quotations from Gough and having letters in its columns from the Civic League. A temperance sermon is advertised and the Gazette has a long editorial on the sacredness of the oath of office, in which the conviction and jailing of rumsellers is demanded.

The acme of temperance to such people is two rumsellers in jail. If there ever should be five of these fellows in jail for liquor selling, it would kill the temperance leaders in Maine with joy.

* * *

Public Opinion is running high. A new move is made by the Ring. Old Slickly Gurley, from Apperson, has appeared at the county building. At the same time [illegible] from Coburn and Morgan arrived. These men held a council of war in the room. The first question is, "Who's on the jury?" The names of all the jurors are carefully considered. By all laws of chance it is certain that out of all these men, to be drawn, that one of Morgan's, Lynne's or Gurley's henchmen will be on the jury that will consider Bane's case. Striking his open palm with his fist, old Gurley urges: "The jury must disagree. It won't do to let that crowd convict Bane. Who knows what they'll be up to next?"

How Jurors Are Won Over

Each boss finds the jurors who naturally will listen to him. Down to the boiler room with their jurors go the politicians. No advice is given, no money is paid, no suggestions are made, but old Gurley keeps talking about like this:

"I don't believe Bane's guilty; I'd set on that jury 'till my pants wore out before I'd convict him."

Mr. Skeets, who had a broken leg last Winter, would never have been on the jury list to get money enough to pay his taxes if it had not been for Morgan's influence. All the jurors from Campton, Apperson, Coburn and Kenton were cogs of the political wheel. During Republican rule in Rockford when party feeling ran high, in one ward that usually went Democratic, not a Democrat's name was put into the jury box by the aldermen. Morgan struck back by urging all his lieutenants in the rural Democratic towns not to put any Republican names in the jury box. Morgan and his men openly voted to have all Republican names rejected. As McDuff once said,—"I don't want any black fellows on my jury."

In the Catacombs

"Nor I," added Captain Watts. "Billy if you and I were to be tried for assault and battery, them fellers would convict us of murder in the first degree."

The atmosphere of courthouse corridors changes when the party bosses are changed. The jury room for small criminal cases, in Kent County, was not marked "Travers No. 1" or "Travers No. 2," but it was down in the catacombs, where Morgan, like Luigi, the bandit captain, made his headquarters.

Case of Baine is opened with a jury that suits the Ring. The County Attorney delivers to the public, not for the jury, in his opening, a long tribute to that edible crustacean, the lobster; he calls it, the crimson beauty, the most delicious morsel of the sea. He describes the demoralizing, debasing effect of alcoholic beverages, and expiates on the violation of God's only law in the Constitution; he waxes warm on temperance, and hurls all of his vindictiveness and abusive eloquence against the defendant. He concludes by demanding their closest attention to the evidence that will surely send the demon to jail.

When he concluded a deputy sheriff informed him that none of the important witnesses for the state could be found. The first witness called is Oliver Dinebane, church member and prominent citizen:

Q. "Do you know Frank Bane?"

A. "I do not."

Q. "Were you ever in his place of business?"

A. "No."

Q. "Do you know the nature of his business?"

A. "I do not."

Witness dismissed. No cross-examination.

Mrs. Crank Gets Riled

Mrs. B. T. Y. Crank is called and sworn. She writes articles on the rum question, pretends to know more than Jehovah does on how to handle this great question, and once got up a petition to the Methodist Book Concern to have a new translation of the Bible that would omit the drinking of the first temperance man, Noah.

Q. "Do you know Frank Bane?"

A. "I do." (Loudly.)

The cross-examination was about like this:

"How old is he? Where was he born? What church does he attend? Were you ever at his home? Were you ever in his store?" To the last question she proudly answered "No."

The defendant's lawyer angered her when he asked, "Does your husband own a cider press?" Her answer in explanation was interrupted by the lawyer's shouting "That's enough, sit down, Mrs. Cider."

A titter causes the court crier to rap for order. Mrs. Crank leaves the stand feeling that she has been insulted by the attorney, whom she ever afterward spoke of as a "rummie."

* * *

Captain Isaac Dyer testifies.

Q. "Captain, do you know Mr. Bane?"

A. "I do, sir."

Q. "Where did you first see him?"

A. "At the wreck of the 'Royal Tar,' sir."

Q. "When was that?"

A. "Ten years ago, sir."

Q. "What do you remember about that wreck?"

A. "I remember, sir, that Frank had saved the lives of two children."

Dramatics in Eleventh Hour.

Q. "How, Captain?"

A. "By placing them, sir, on a floating spar, and standing by 'em 'till help came."

Q. "Did you ever buy any short lobsters or beer of Bane?"

A. "No, sir." Emphatically.

Q. "Have you any reasons to believe he is guilty of this charge?"

A. "I know he ain't, sir."

The only thing for the County Attorney, knowing he could not convict on the evidence, was to deliver one of his best temperance lectures to the jury.

"If you will convict this fiend you will hear the angels in heaven sing paeans of glory. If you let him go free there will be rejoicing by the demons in hell. Already I can hear them tuning up their harps. The prohibitory law of Maine is the only law God has in our Constitution. Its framers are already with the saints in the great beyond. Even now I can see them kneeling and singing hallelujahs before the great throne of God."

Under Sign of the Cross

Bane cares not for this harangue, for he knows the County Attorney is talking for the benefit of the public. After being charged by the Judge, the jury file out to their room, where they deliberate.

"Do you presume Crandell really wants to convict him?" asked one.

"Convict nothing," answered Morgan's man.

The verdict was not guilty.

This will give a fair idea of the contents of "The Plunderer." Dr. Crockett ends his book with this:

IN future years the authors of trashy novels will write such stories as "Willie, the Boy Politician, or a Nation Plundered." Then the politicians of yesterday will be what the Captain Kidds are now—Pirates.

But Morgan had the redeeming quality. When he voted on election day he never marked his ballot with lines from corner to corner of the square, but always within the square he made a perfect cross. Under the sign of the cross he fought the political battles of this life, and lost.

A local clergyman, who was his religious confessor, tells me that Morgan, at the eleventh hour, marked his Life's ballot with a perfect Cross. Under the sign of the Cross he fought the greatest battle of this Life, and won by being elected to the Upper House of Eternity.

The Author hopes that when his voyage of Life is ended that he, too—well—will meet his old Boss, William Longdale Morgan.

Beatrice Fairfax Says: Girls,

DON'T LET THE MEN SPEND MONEY ON YOU

By Beatrice Fairfax.

GIRLS, do you ever think how much it costs a man to pay attention to a Girl? By "costs" I mean the actual money, not to mention time, that he spends on her. So many of you write to me complaining that your men friends do not take you to places of amusement, etc.

Don't you think yourselves that you demand a good deal? You know, the average young man is not making a very large salary, and if he is going to keep out of debt and perhaps save a little, he really has not a great amount to spend on trifles.

This habit of expecting the men to spend money on them keeps the girls from a good deal of attention that they might otherwise receive. Of course, when a man becomes interested in a girl, he naturally expects to give her any little treats that he can afford, but when he finds out how much is expected of him he is frightened away. He thinks to himself, "Dear me, I can't keep this up; I can't afford it."

A man quickly tires of spending money on a girl unless he is really in love with her, and even then if the girl is wise she does not demand too much.

No man is pleased by the thought that a girl only likes him for what he gives her.

There is another side to it also: When you find a man of moderate circumstances showering gifts and treats on a girl you may be sure that he is improvident.

Do not jump to the conclusion that a man is stingy because he is not always inviting you out.

A great many young men have to help with the home expenses, a number of them carry life insurance, and all of them who are ambitious are trying to save a little money.

When a man falls in love with you, wouldn't you rather that he should save all he can, with a view to marrying soon, than fritter his money away on theatres, etc?

Most girls consider an engagement ring absolutely necessary, and, if the man can afford it, it is nice to have this souvenir of the happiest hour of your life; but when you love each other what difference does a trifle like a ring make?

There are so many ways to be happy without spending money when two people really care for each other.

And if you are not engaged to the man all the more reason why you should not allow him to spend all his money on you. Say, for instance, a man invites you to Coney Island. To begin with, he pays car fare for two, then admission to the different places of amusement, then dinner, and, finally, carfare home.

Don't you see that comes to quite a formidable amount, when he is probably not making more than $15 a week. Once in a while a treat of this kind is very nice, but don't expect it too often.

Time and again I have heard men say that they would like to know more girls, but that they really could not afford it.

"You see," said one man, "unless you take a girl everywhere she thinks you are stingy, and so we men without much money can't afford to become friends with any girl."

This is not a sermon, girls, it is just a little sisterly advice from one who has heard her brothers and men friends thresh this subject out many times.

Tucked away in the depths of every girl's heart is the thought that some day she will marry the man of her choice and live happy ever after. There is nothing to be ashamed of in this—a woman's thoughts turn to love and marriage as naturally as a flower to the sun. But even though it is so often in a girl's mind, I doubt very much if she begins to realize what it all means.

Even at the altar the solemnity of the vows she makes weighs but lightly on her mind.

She loves the man and means to make him a good wife, but her ideas of the duties of a wife are of the vaguest.

In marrying a man it is not alone his love you accept, you are in debt to him, in most cases, for your actual support. The only way in which you can repay this obligation is by making him a good wife.

The woman who is a good wife and mother is filling the highest vocation that is granted to woman. There is no career equal to it. We do best that which we are most naturally fitted for, and every true woman should be at her best when fulfilling the duties of wife and motherhood.

The good wife should be her husband's comfort, strengthening him when he is weak, softening him when he is hard, walking proudly by him in success, giving him tenderest love and sympathy in adversity. He should spend his money wisely, remembering that every cent represents work and thought on his part.

His good name she should hold more precious than gold. Many a man has lost heart and courage simply because he could not keep pace with the demands of his wife. The young wife finds it hard to realize that she cannot have all the luxuries she had in her father's house.

Even if she does not actually complain, she looks hurt and surprised when the husband hints that expenses are running a little too high. He loves her and wants her to have as many pretty clothes and comforts as she has been accustomed to, and that is the beginning of the trouble. Try and remember, girls, that if you wish to help your husbands to success you must be content with small beginnings.

You can either be the guiding star and helpmate of a man's life or you can be a clog and drawback, dragging him to failure. So when you are building your castles in the air, add a practical touch to your day dreams by asking yourselves "How am I prepared myself for this happy dream, should it come true? Am I training myself to fit this vocation properly or am I just frittering away my time, an idle butterfly with no practical attainments—a mere parlor ornament?" If you want to make good wives you must know something about the practical side of life.

Married life is not all romance, you know. After the first glamour has worn off there will be many hours when the sordid side of life is uppermost and love seems perilously near flitting.

Your husband, absorbed by business cares, will not always remember to kiss you and tell you he loves you and that you keep house beautifully. Then is your chance to prove the stuff of which you are made. Don't cry and neglect your duties because your efforts are not sufficiently appreciated.

Just bear in mind that business worries are worries that cannot be pushed aside. It is because he has loved you and married you that his cares are so engrossing. He has promised to provide for you, and must do so, even at the risk of insulting that most imperative of all gods, Cupid. But see that you propitiate the little tyrant by burning all the incense possible at his shrine.

If you don't make him welcome some other woman will, and that is the begining of the end. For all of this devotion you naturally will expect to be well repaid and so you will be by the love and devotion of your husband.

Don't think for a moment that I am advocating all the love and sacrifice on one side. The husband owes his wife just as much love and attention as she does him, but, as Kipling says, "That is another story."

BEACH AND PARK BUSY IN VACATION

Business Increases as Holidays and Half-Holidays Give Opportunity for Recreation.

VACATION days are proving a misnomer to the managers and attaches of the open-air amusement places that surround Boston. At the Summer parks and beaches patronage is increasing as ordinary business life becomes more quiet. People are taking advantage of their half Saturdays and their regular Summer vacations to go the rounds of the Summer resorts. The same is true of the various steamer routes, which are crowded now on their daily trips. The open air vaudeville programmes at the Summer parks are being filled out to full strength now, to catch the cream of the trade while business is booming. Announcements of beach and park bills for the week are as follows:

Wonderland

To the already long list of attractions at Wonderland, the big pleasure park at Revere, are added [illegible] which are worthy of [illegible] features [illegible] any amusement [illegible]. One of these new attractions is [illegible] Princess Tiny Mite, who is claimed to be the smallest [illegible] a particular [illegible] women and [illegible]. The latter is a handsome young woman, who is made by some mysterious power to float and dance above the heads of her audiences. These three shows are absolutely new [illegible]. To-morrow Benjamin F. Teed's Military Band begins two weeks' engagement [illegible] of band music. James [illegible], king of the high wire, who was severely injured by a fall recently, will return to Wonderland to-morrow for a brief engagement.

See the other shows, watch the [illegible] free air circus, listen to the music [illegible] the nightly illuminations and participate in the life and action of Wonderland.

Paragon Park

The free circus acts at Paragon Park this week are most important. These include the following five headline features: "The Human Spider," a human curiosity from the South Sea Islands, who climbs a thick rope with his toes and fingers a height of 150 feet, and when level with the top executes the most astounding stunts, giving him the likeness of a monkey or spider more than a human being; Speedy, the world's champion high diver, who dives from a height of 160 feet into a tank of water only thirty-six inches deep; the Norrises, in fancy high diving and their thrilling fire dive; Barton's pony [illegible] dog circus, and [illegible] in his death trap loop and leaping the [illegible]. In the way of free music there is the Mar and M[illegible] Band in afternoon and evening concerts on the lagoon, with Johnnie and Florence Maguire, the youthful soloists [illegible] with the Martland Band, which [illegible] the Acton Band, which [illegible] the Palm Garden; Hutchins Orchestra [illegible] the Bo[illegible] outside the [illegible] the monster [illegible] can be heard [illegible] are such [illegible] devices as the [illegible] the sand bump, the [illegible] the Great [illegible], and the Bridge of Sighs. In the way of [illegible] the view of park visitors climbing the Alps in "Switzerland," the [illegible] gardens, the recreation grounds, the picturesque lagoon with its gondolas plying to and fro, as if one were looking at a bit of old Venice, the court of electric fountains and the peerless electric illumination.

Norumbega Park

No matter how warm or uncomfortable it may be in the city, Norumbega Park is always comfortable. It is situated on high ground, directly in the path of the cool breezes that blow down the Charles River Valley. A pleasant change from the vaudeville usually given in the covered open air theatre is this week's attraction, which is J. W. Gorman's musical comedy company in "The Girl from Vassar." The piece has been given elaborate production, and the [illegible] is beautiful. There [illegible] comedians. [illegible] It hasn't [illegible] an [illegible] that [illegible] the story [illegible] Vassar who [illegible] gets into all [illegible] a lot of [illegible] fun. Steamer Cape Ann

Trips to Gloucester on the steamer Cape Ann are numbered among the best "outside" trips now. Boats leave the north side of Central wharf for the regular trips every day, week days at 10 a. m. and Sunday at 10 [illegible].

To Nova Scotia

Nova Scotia is attracting unusual attention this season as a popular pleasure resort for people from New England. The Dominion Atlantic Railway Line, eight trips per week service, leaving Boston daily (except Sundays) at [illegible] p. m. and Tuesdays and Fridays 12 noon, is exceedingly popular, and the [illegible] steamers Prince George, Boston and Yarmouth are filled to their capacity each sailing.

LIGHT PLAYS RULE FOR WARM DAYS

LIGHT comedy, light opera, light lines and light songs and music rule at the Boston playhouses during this, the mid-Summer season. Your hot weather theatregoer wants to be amused, not torn hither and yon by a succession of dizzy emotions. So the managers who are still keeping open house through July days are planning their dramatic menus accordingly. The roast beef of deep, dark tragedy and the plum pudding of heavy acting are mostly in cold storage. The theatrical chef titillates the capricious Summer appetite with salads of scintillating song and with sherbet of comique.

Keith's Theatre

One of the best bills ever given at Keith's during a Summer season will hold the boards this week. Keller and Paul's spectacular production, "In Morocco," is very much of a novelty. As its title indicates Moorish people and customs are what it pictures. A troupe of Moorish dancing girls and acrobats, together with a platoon of Zouaves, make up the company. The finish shows some really remarkable military evolutions. Bessie Wynn, who made a great hit in "Babes in Toyland," is to make her first Boston appearance in vaudeville. She is one of the handsomest women on the stage, and does a most attractive specialty.

One of the big events will be the appearance of Tom Nawn and company after an absence of some four years. "Pat and the Genii" is the sketch to be presented, with Nawn in his famous Irish character.

Julius Tannan, the premier mimic and story-teller, will hold over a second week.

Lawrence Crane, the Irish magician, will show several new illusions, with "Cremation" as his strongest feature. Mlle. Martha is a pretty and shapely girl who does some wonderful work on the trapeze and slack rope. Plantation pastimes in the shape of songs and dances will be shown by the Dixie Serenaders, who are among the best colored performers of the day. Sam Williams, with a planologue, the Grace Tempest Trio of singers and dancers, Archer and Crocker, comedy acrobats, the Sidden Brothers, comedians, Hamilton and Howlett, versatile musicians, Harry Hargrove, English coster singer, and the kinetograph will complete the program.

Park Theatre

"The Late Mr. Tompkins," which has been the bill at the Park Theatre the past week, will be continued by the Lillian Lawrence players for another week. This farce comedy has made one of the biggest hits of the season at that house and [illegible] of the theatre has been [illegible] to entertain all who wished to see the play. It has been decided to prolong its stay for another week. The play, which is the latest kind of farce and built for laughing purposes only, tells a highly amusing story of a misunderstanding arising from the [illegible] that was being read in the rehearsal of a play are part of a plot to murder. The entire cast as seen last week will be retained. Miss Lawrence will again be seen as Mrs. Reggie Blackstone, while Mr. Miller will play her husband, and the balance of the characters will be in the capable keeping of Mr. Sealey, Miss Bondhill, Mr. Evarts, Miss Bradley, Mr. Ingram, Mr. Emory and Miss West. The practice of giving petit concerts between the acts will be continued during the season, with a weekly change of musical program.

Castle Square Theatre

No season of Sumer opera can well be complete without "Maritana," and it is to fulfill its mission as a provider of the best in the musical line that the Castle Square management, under the direction of William C. Masson, is to produce this famous work by William Vincent Wallace during the coming week. "Maritana" has had fifty years and more of life on the stage, but it has by no means worn out its welcome, and it is as generously received as it was on the evening of its original production in London half a century ago. The story of the opera, the picturesque characters and the romantic music all come in for their share of the applause. As for the music, for that is the main thing in an opera, it is melodious throughout every bar, and there is not a moment when the theatregoer is not being charmed by its delightful freshness. The Castle Square singers will be strongly cast for the revival of "Maritana." Miss Clara Lane and Miss Lois Ewell will alternate in the title role, and George Tallman and Harry Davies as Don Caesar, [illegible] B. Travers will appear as the Marquis, J. K. Murray as the King, George Shields as Don Jose, W. H. Pringle as the Captain, Hattie Belle Ladd as the Marchioness, and Louise Le Baron as Lazarillo.

Grand Opera House

Manager Magee announces that the Grand Opera House will open its season Old Home Week, the opening performance being on Saturday evening, July 27. The attraction being "Convict 999," one of A. H. Woods's new offerings, and it is said to be in many ways the most stupendous melodrama production attempted in years. The reason for this is the numerous effects made necessary by the author. Besides Kelley's Zouaves there is to be a jail-breaking act, which, it is claimed, rivals Houdini's.

Howell Hansel in Benefit

The announcement is made that Howell Hansel, the popular leading man of local stock companies, will make his reappearance at the Castle Square Theatre on the afternoon of Friday, July 26. Mr. Hansel has long had a desire to show his fondness for animals by giving a performance in aid of the Animal Rescue League of this city. He feels that the appeal of the league is especially strong with the public just at this season and so he will make this philanthropy the beneficiary of his coming appearance. Mr. Hansel will give a production of Ludwig Fulda's great drama "The Lost Paradise" as the attraction of his re-appearance in which he will have the assistance of his pupils in the Boston Conservatory of Dramatic Arts.

Bowdoin Square Theatre

At the Bowdoin Square Theatre that splendid drama, "A Daughter of the South," is the attraction this week. Captain Victor Grey in love with Agnes [illegible] War [illegible] Agnes [illegible] Confederates capture the post [illegible] prisoner of war. Gordon [illegible] the command of [illegible] He sends [illegible] to a fortress [illegible] Agnes [illegible] Agnes has escaped [illegible] Charlotte Hunt will appear as Agnes Marlon; Arthur Behrens as Captain Victor Grey. Others in the cast will be Laura Hope [illegible], Florence Hale, Ralph Brown, Tommy Shearer, Edwin Denison, Wilmer Wright, Harry Brooks, Frank Wright, Leonard Brogsten and O. Plunkett.

Austin & Stone's Museum

Colonel Alf Waterman's big colored entertainment, "A Southern Cakewalk," was the big card which filled Austin & Stone's to overflowing daily last week. They hold over for this week. The musical part of the show brought out the famous "Yel[illegible]" [illegible] handsome [illegible] girls, several colored soloists and a [illegible] of mixed voices. The dancing was [illegible] enough to suit the most enthusiastic [illegible], and there were several novelties [illegible] notable the [illegible] Smythe and Miss [illegible] Tom Bateman. In the "validated" [illegible] show will be seen Waldy Carr [illegible] mimic, the Belarts, the Marion [illegible] company, including Jean and Jessie Marion, and Tom Edwards, Paddy [illegible], Vera Belasco, Cara Steele and Nell [illegible].

Tremont Theatre

"The Hurdy Gurdy Girl" passed a milestone last night when the fiftieth performance was given. The piece shows the stimulus of several recent changes which turned out to be seen to benefit. These include two [illegible] additions to the first act and one to the second. NEWPORT BUTLERS TO ACT AS HOSTS

Newport, July 13.—Thompson and Turner and Jent and several of the other well known butlers, in residence here, have just completed their plans for the reception of a distinguished company of butlers and "gentlemen's gentlemen" who are coming from England to play cricket with them on July 25.

The Jeames Yellowplush of Thackeray's fancy would make a fine recording secretary for the doings that will be in progress when the English chaps arrive.

Already, at a solemn meeting held over Charlie Sullivan's cafe, Sullivan himself having nothing but the kindliest feelings for butlers, officers were elected for the Newport Cricket Club, which is the name of the organization of butlers and "first door men."

The cricket game which will be played on July 25 will be the beginning of the ceremonies which will cement the entente cordiale between the American and the English butlers. But it will not be the end. Far from it.

For on September 4 there will be a grand ball at the Sea View pavilion. Back in the days when the Count Cantacuzene was paying his attentions to Julia Dent Grant he gave there the finest ball of its sort ever held at Newport. The butlers will do their best in a respectful manner to approach the glories of the Cantacuzene function.

The impassive faced members who have been elected to office in connection with the forthcoming festivities are as follows:

President, William Attrill, butler for Henry Mortimer Brooks; vice president, Frederick Thompson, butler for Mrs. Ogden Mills; captain, James Hunt; vice captain, F. Hearne; secretary, Herbert Squire, treasurer, William Coles; executive committee, William Jent, butler for Robert Livingston Beeckman; J. S. Jones Tailor; R. Tweedale, butler for William Payne Thompson; W. C. Turner, butler for Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish; ball committee, William Coles (chairman), James Hunt, W. C. Turner, John Chisholm, butler to Mrs. Joseph E. Widener, and William Attrill.

They are all on the qui vive, yes, sir; yes, indeed.

'GREEN BIRD' NOTES HEARD AT MAJESTIC

Whole House and Company Very, Very Busy Getting Ready for Opening.

A company of seventy people all rehearsing at once requires some little space, and the people who appear in "The Green Bird" have therefore spread themselves all over the place. In the first place the stage of the Majestic Theatre—where the first performance on any stage of "The Green Bird" will be given July 29—is pretty much occupied by the artisans who are building the production. Scenic Artist Hammond has a dozen men at work with paints and brushes and Head Carpenter Archie Craig has a score more at work building the production. This naturally does not leave much space for rehearsals, and so it has been found necessary during the day time to take the chorus over to one of the big halls on Washington street and there put them through the steps, songs and [illegible] as their share of the production. But the principals of the company require space to work by themselves too. It must be understood, in the early days of rehearsal—and indeed even up to the last minute—it is necessary for the principal members of the cast to get off by themselves, in groups of two or more, and rehearse their own scenes. Thus Fred Lennox and Alice Hosmer may perchance be found in the manager's office busily at work on one of their funniest scenes. In the theatre lobby Helen Hayes, John P. Kennedy, Joan Lorenz and others may be trying out a dance. In the box office Alice Kerr is trying over the business with one of her songs, while down in the smoking room Elsa Ryan and Charles H. Bowers are rehearsing one of their jolly duets. Will H. Sloane usually selects the stage for his rehearsals and plugs away on his lines regardless of the hammering of the carpenters or the bustle of the painters.

Benefit to "Tom" Murphy

Thomas Murphy, treasurer of the Tremont Theatre, who has been dangerously ill in the City Hospital, is to be given a benefit performance in the Tremont Theatre on Sunday, July 28. Mr. Murphy was stricken with appendicitis the first of June. Peritonitis set in and grave illness followed that nearly cost Mr. Murphy his life. He pulled through, however, and is now a convalescent. This benefit is being planned by his friends, while Business Manager A. L. Sheehan of the Tremont is attending to the business end of it. Seats are now on sale and all checks may be made payable to Mr. Sheehan. Practically all the principals in "The Hurdy Gurdy Girl" will take part in the bill. Richard Carle, who is vacationing at Marblehead, will come up in town especially to do a turn.

Hub Theatre

A fine new program of moving pictures, songs and of music by the Ladies' Orchestra begins at the Hub Theatre to-morrow. The hour show of moving pictures is considered one of the best selected and most realistic moving picture mechanism can produce. Scenes from real life, comprising many different circumstances and conditions in human affairs, are put on with startling similitude. One of the pleasantest features of Hub Theatre performances is the program of music by the Ladies' Orchestra, which is ever increasing in popularity with patrons.

Flashlights Upon Stageland.

By "The Observer."

A BREATH of the real Summer, with the merry lilt of the tuneful bird that fills the air with sweetest melody, is in the performance at the Castle Square, where the Stock Opera Company is presenting the most tuneful operas that have ever been written. Beginning their season with good old "Robin Hood" they have wandered in quest of songs through the green fields of the more classic productions. During the past week "Il Trovatore," with its powerful scenes and moving melodies, was presented to full houses. Nothing is attempted by Manager W. C. Masson's fine coterie of singers that is not calculated to cheer up those who have become lethargic from the cares of business and the depressing effects of atmospheric conditions. The stage settings are cooling and summery so far as possible, and glimpses of gleaming water enforce the illusion at times that one is really at the seaside instead of in the heart of the city. Among the singers are many prime favorites, who include such artists as Miss Clara Lane, Miss Lois Ewell, Miss Louise Le Baron, Miss Hattie Belle Ladd, J. K. Murray, George Tallman, Harry Davies, George Shields and W. H. Pringle.

FOR purely parentage, if not local flavor, "The Green Bird," which is to be produced soon at the Majestic Theatre, seems to be well up at the front. The author, D. K. Stevens, is a Bostonian. Adolph Mayer, the general manager, is a native of Roxbury. The production is financed by Boston money. Among the cast are Fred Lennox, who was brought up right here in the South End, George Schiller, who pays taxes on a home in Squantum; Elsie Ryan, who is a Bostonian, and Will H. Sloane, who has lived here so much that he is about two-thirds Bostonian. Artist Hammond of the Tremont Theatre is painting the scenery, the music is being printed here, two local houses are furnishing the costumes. Yet the actual scenes of the piece are a very long way from Boston.

RICHARD CARLE recently sat in at a gathering where a man was boring the assembly about four blooded cows he owned.

"Say," says Carle, "what breed are these cows?"

"Well, really," replied the other, "I can't say just now."

"Nonsense!" retorted Carle, "a man who has only four cows ought to know their initials."

TOWARD the end of the Summer George M. Cohan and his bride, formerly Miss Agnes Nolan of Brookline, will start abroad on a real honeymoon. It is now given out that the "Jerry" Cohans, George's parents, will accompany the young couple, making a new set of Four Cohans en route.

IT may be the holiday season, but a great many of our Boston dramatic people seem to be hustling just the same. There are theatres to be overhauled, advance plans to be completed, opportunities to be watched. There is, over all, a considerable air of expectancy as to what the Fall season will bring forth, on account of many business changes which are to go into effect next season.

THE city theatres which are running say "Come inside, out of the Summer air, and keep cool." The open-air theatres say "Come outside and get the cool air." Take your choice.

Seumas MacManus On Irish Affairs

Gifted Author and Lecturer Describes Erin's Men and Events.

THE brilliant pen of the famous Irish author and patriot pictures in this article the effects upon the minds of the Irish people produced by the late Home Rule bill. Mr. MacManus describes the crisis that Erin has come through and touches upon the problems that came to life since the great mass of people has awakened to the fact that the Parliamentary Party offers no salvation from the terrible conditions prevailing on Emerald Isle. He devotes himself, also, to the advocacy of the temperance crusades and gives a vivid portrayal of how insane asylums are being constantly filled. He analyzes the causes for this lost state of things.

MORE and more every day is being made known the great shock received by that large party of the Irish people which so faithfully, through all these long years, stuck by the Irish Parliamentary party—the shock which the late wonderful "Home Rule" bill gave them. From prominent individuals among the number, from United Irish League branches and executives and from a provincial press, which had been accused of slavishness in its devotion to the Parliamentary party, are going up, not merely cries of despair, but of threat, against the party for misleading them for years, and finally aiding in the move to force this farcical bill upon Ireland.

The Cork Examiner says: "Some misunderstanding seemed to have grown up between the party and the people; it would be rendering but poor service to the party or to the cause of unity, to pretend that the country is content with the situation when, instead, dissatisfaction is profound and widespread."

The Kilkenny People, with bitter irony, writes: "Mr. Redmond confessed that he never disguised from himself that the policy of half measures was an impossible one. Well, all we can say is, that if he did not disguise it from himself he succeeded in disguising it very well from the country."

"Home Rule," says the Westmeath Independent, "now appears further removed than it did fifteen years ago." This paper now discovers that there is much reason in the attitude of those opposed to parliamentarianism.

Beyond Control of Redmond?

The Drogheda Independent discovers that the Irish people have been living in a fool's paradise.

Says the Enniscorthy Echo: "The country is enraged at the history of broken promises, and heartily sick of inefficient and barren protests from her parliamentary representatives."

"The country," says the Leinster Leader, "is in no mood for subtle blandishments. Men in Ireland, today, are claiming the right to do their own thinking. The Irish party got out of touch with the Irish people and the Irish nation, and the shuffling of the cards in parliament came to be of more importance to Mr. Redmond than the trend of thought and national effort in Ireland." It adds that Mr. Redmond, who, of course, was chiefly responsible for the Irish Councils Bill, came to the great Dublin convention with the intention of forcing the bill upon a timid Irish people, but, it adds: "By the time Mr. Redmond got to the convention it was clear that the country had travelled beyond his control, and there was nothing for him to do but step into line or fall by the wayside."

The Meath Chronicle speaks more boldly, saying:

"The Irish people, following the blind policy of the Irish party, have played an ostrich part, and refused to see the truth. What have the Parliamentary party to say in face of this perfectly plain and unmistakable cul de sac into which they have led their followers? Is it their serious intention to dribble out the next three or four years in meaningless attention at Westminster, wasting the money, hope, energies in weaving ropes of sand? That they are quite incapable of dealing with any live issue has been made plain to every man in Ireland."

And it adds, pathetically: "Whether the country agree with the Sinn Fein policy or not, it cannot fail to realize the present absolute breakdown of active parliamentarianism." It says that the fight has still to be fought, "but certainly not at Westminster."

Calls It "Chasing Shadows."

The Southern Star wakes up to inquire what recompense the Irish people have received for the services performed by the Irish party to British liberalism. "Hitherto we have only seen and been chasing shadows; when will these spiritualistic seances be at an end?"

The Kerry Reporter, almost brutal in its anger, says that the Irish Parliamentary party is now discredited and distrusted. "One of the results of the complete failure of the parliamentary methods," it says, "will be the winning of large numbers of the Irish people from looking to that played-out form of political humbug for the redress of their grievances. They will incline more towards the policy of the Sinn Fein party, and I trust that that policy shall be given at least a trial."

"The Liberal Prime Minister has now definitely shelved home rule, or anything leading up to home rule, and also the Irish University question, and he says that the Land question and Evicted Tenants question will be dealt with at the leisure of the government, if at all."

This state of things has created in Ireland a crisis greater than any we have known since the fall of Parnell. It has been a rude awakening and painful surprise to the unthinking mass of the people who, despite the warnings of the thinking portion of the country, persisted in paying up to keep a political army at Westminster, and believing the political promises that these people, time and again, made to them. It is a rude awakening, I said, and it is difficult to prophecy what the great unthinking mass of the people will now do.

Crisis Will Make People Think

The crisis will prove useful if it makes them think. That it is making some of them think, anyhow, is evident. For the United Irish League in many places is already in open revolt against the Parliamentary party. In County Monaghan, where a parliamentary vacancy arose, the Parliamentary party sent down to fill the vacancy Mr. Donovan of Belfast (comrade to Mr. Joseph Devlin, M. P., on the recent Australian tour, during which Messrs. Devlin and Donovan distinguished themselves by pleading for a strengthening of "our great British empire," and again and again drinking the health of "Our King").

The worm turned, and the United Irish League, together with the representatives of the district councils, chose for themselves a local man, a Mr. Lardner. Mr. Joseph Devlin, M. P., however, being president of the Board of Erin, A. O. H., evidently issued an order for the Hibernians to do their duty to the parliamentary party, and all the Hibernians in the division rose up for Mr. Donovan, a King and Empire man. A bitter fight is now raging between the United Irish League candidate, and the Parliamentary party's candidate. This is but one of the first instances in the great revolt. Thinking people are indeed sorry that the Hibernian order allowed itself to be made the catspaw of the Parliamentary party, which, while using it where it can be used, at the same time heartily despises it.

Urge Temperance at Harvestings.

By the anti-drinking crusade, which has been working wonders in Ireland recently, another step in advance was made when, during a mission in Templecrum, county Kilkenny, the farmers of the parish combined to abolish the custom of supplying intoxicating drink at haymakings and threshings. In many places this custom was the cause of much evil, but so firmly had it been established that farmers could not get away from it without running the risk of losing their harvest.

A year ago Canon Purcell of this parish took the first step when he prevented youths under twenty-one years of age from assisting on these occasions when drink was distributed. During the recent mission the farmers came together and signed a pledge not to supply drink at any haymaking or threshing, and not to allow their sons or servants to help at any place where drink was expected to be given. During the mission the total abstinence and anti-treating pledge was taken by large numbers.

At the Mariner's Church, Kingstown, the other day, in the presence of a large number of friends, John Howard Parnell, brother of Charles Stuart Parnell, was married to Miss Olivia Isabelle Matier, daughter of the late Colonel James Smythe of the Sixty-ninth Regiment. John Howard Parnell is brother to Charles Stuart Parnell, a pigmy beside a giant. At a certain crisis in the parliamentary movement, ten or twelve years ago, John Howard Parnell was chosen leader of the Parnellite section in order to save the party. He was a miserable failure, both as a leader and as an Irishman. On a recent occasion he went out of his way to proclaim his loyalty to the English King. He was made city marshal of Dublin some time ago, and still holds that position.

Tea-Drinking Filling Asylums.

The sum of £875,000 is the amount annually laid out upon the support of poor persons under the poor law relief in Ireland—at least that was the sum expended in the last financial year. Of this sum £460,000 was expended on the maintenance of persons in the workhouses, £220,000 for relief of poor persons living outside the workhouses, and the large sum of £197,000, or more than one-fifth of the total, went to pay salaries of officials. A large proportion of money expended in Ireland (as I suppose elsewhere) goes to pay people for distributing the remainder.

It may be noted that, while £875,000 was expended upon the poor, £520,000 was expended upon asylums for the insane. It is expected that the former cost will be decreased during the coming years, but it is very much to be feared that the latter will increase as it has been increasing during the decades that are gone.

It is undeniable that insanity is increasing in Ireland. To many causes is this ascribed, but many who know the country well (some of them medical doctors) agree that excessive drinking of tea is to a large extent accountable for it.

In Ireland, especially in the country places, where formerly the people lived "within themselves" upon good, healthful food, the produce of their own farms, tea and bakers' bread has now come to be the staple food. The oaten corn was at one time always ground into meal to supply the wants of the family the year round. The mills are now going into ruin, for the corn instead of being ground is sold for export, and the healthful and substantial oaten porridge and the sustaining and body-building oaten bread, which used to form a chief part of our country people's food, are disappearing in most places, and have disappeared in many. More's the pity. In bitterness Ireland will reap the fruits of this diet change.

NEWPORT EAGER TO VIEW FAMOUS LEEDS NECKLACE

Society Little Interested in Mrs. Goelet's Plan to Limit Food for Servants.

Newport, R. I., July 13.—Everybody in Newport just now is trying to get a peep at Mrs. William B. Leeds's pearl necklace, which is said to be the most expensive piece of jewelry ever brought to Newport. The necklace was purchased in Europe by Mr. Leeds, and when it reached this country was held up by the customs authorities pending a dispute over the duty. The customs people, realizing that whatever the decision is Mr. Leeds will settle, have allowed the necklace to come here under guard, and it is now in Newport's strongest safety vault. Mrs. Leeds is soon to have a house warming in her new home, Rough Point, formerly owned by Frederick W. Vanderbilt, and if the difficulties with the customs officials are adjusted in the meantime she will wear the necklace. Mrs. Leeds plans to entertain lavishly this summer.

Interest is intense in Mrs. Ogden Goelet's campaign to cut down the cost per day of the commissary departments of the various cottages. Although Mrs. Goelet is an heiress to $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, and is already worth millions, she believes that no servant should be allowed more than 55 cents a day for his or her daily food. Society has listened patiently to Mrs. Goelet, but very little enthusiasm has been displayed over her plan.

"Let her do what she wishes and we will manage our own affairs," said one society woman.

Mr. and Mrs. Marsden J. Perry of Providence, the new owners of the Ross R. Winans villa, "Beak House," in Newport, spent Sunday looking over their new purchase, which they greatly admired. They will occupy the place at once.

Henry Keyes and his wife of Baltimore, of cake fame, are at the club for the seventeenth season. Mr. Morgan also owns a twelve-acre lot opposite the club upon which he is talking of building a Summer cottage.

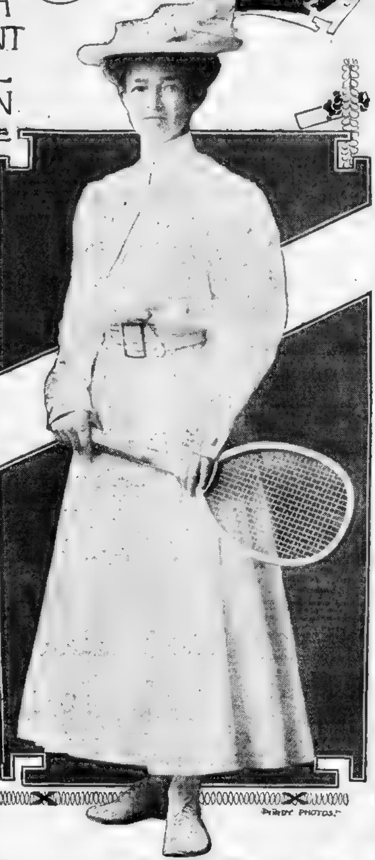
MISS EDITH ROTCH A SUMMER SOCIETY GIRL

A NEW AND EXCLUSIVE PHOTOGRAPH OF A PROMINENT BOSTON GIRL WHO HAS WON HONORS ON THE COURTS



PURDY PHOTOS.

NEW ENGLAND is proudly hailing Miss Edith Rotch, a petite Back Bay society girl as the coming queen of the tennis court. If ever persistency had its reward forcibly demonstrated, it is in the case of Miss Rotch, who was the only representative Boston had in the women's national tennis championship held at Wissahickon, just outside of Philadelphia last year, and who has been winning laurels ever since.

She is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Rotch of Bay State road. Her only sister is Mrs. Channing Frothingham and her brothers are William Rotch, Jr., and Charles M. Rotch, Harvard '01. She, like her sister, is a member of the Vincent Club, and has won quite as much fame in her dances at their performances as in the various tennis tournaments.

With unlimited grit and determination combined with a steady game, Miss Rotch has persistently forged ahead in her chosen sport, until to-day she has come to be regarded as one of the best women tennis players in America. She has doggedly kept at the game, adding style and speed in every match. She is steady, covering the court with great speed. Her staying power is the most noticeable feature of her game, although her play at the net is very good. While participating in the Newport tennis tournament last Summer she was a guest at several of the cottages and received much social attention, and in the game was noted for her grace and ease of movement.

Miss Rotch first took up tennis six years ago. Three years ago she and her brother Charles won the open mixed doubles at Longwood. Two years ago she played a fast game, and when the trials came that Spring to pick a team to represent Boston in the intercity tournament at Longwood Miss Rotch was picked, and won both of her matches.

Miss Evelyn Sears and Eleanor Stockton, two other Vincent Club girls, were also members of the team. In a handicap competition at Longwood two years ago Miss Rotch defeated Helen Homans of New York, who was last year a favorite for the title in the championship tourney at Wissahickon.

She is busy now practicing for the tournaments at Newport this Summer, and already has several invitations from the cottagers there to spend the time with them.

Gloucester

Gloucester, July 13.—The Summer rush to Gloucester continues and the season finds every hotel well filled and the cottages all taken. The season promises to be very prosperous.

Among this week's arrivals is Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward of Newton Centre, the authoress, at her East Gloucester cottage. Mrs. Ward has been in very poor health, but is now convalescent. She has been invited to write the poem for the celebration of Gloucester Day in August.

Mr. and Mrs. William M. Jelly of Salem recently entertained an enjoyable house party at their Annisquam residence.

Speaker John N. Cole of the House of Representatives and family are at their beautiful Summer home on Annisquam River, and the place was the scene of much gaiety over the Fourth.

Storer F. Crafts of the Hotel Commonwealth, Boston, and family are at their Russ Island cottage. Mr. Crafts has recently acquired a large amount of property in this section.

Mrs. E. A. James of Newton has leased the L. G. Burnham estate at Essex for the season.

Boyd Putnam, the actor, and his mother are again at Annisquam for the Summer.

David S. Greenough and family of Jamaica Plain are at their beautiful residence at Eastern Point.

Fred York of Chelsea has purchased Ram's Island in Annisquam River.

Prof. and Mrs. Benjamin Guckenberger of Boston are at the Rockaway Hotel, East Gloucester.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Spaulding of Boston gave a charming house-warming at their new Summer residence on Grapevine road, East Gloucester.

William B. Pidgeon and family of Boston are at their Fresh Water Cove cottage.

C. W. Jones and family of Boston are here for the season.

Col. William A. Pew, Jr., and family of Salem are at Land's End, Rockport.

Mrs. C. E. Shorey of Boston has arrived at her Pigeon Cove Summer home.

Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Jarrett of Boston are among the high-line fishermen at Pigeon Cove.

Walter White and family of Newton are at the Harvey cottage, Pigeon Cove.

George M. Brown and family of Boston have arrived at their Annisquam cottage.

Edward D. Mellen of Cambridge has sold his Summer residence at Annisquam to John P. Bartlett of New York.

Congressman Ernest W. Roberts and family of Chelsea are at their cottage at Land's End.

Miss Elizabeth Tracy of Boston is registered at the Ocean View, Rockport, for the season.

Rangeley Lakes

Rangeley, Me., July 13.—While no records have been broken this week, the catches of trout and salmon have been fully up to the average. Many new parties have arrived and Rangeley is now at its best. Card parties, golf and tennis occupy the attention of those who care little for fishing. Many of those who spend the mornings on the lakes fly-fishing devote their afternoons to automobiling, golf or tennis.

Mrs. S. G. Wheatland of Salem, Mass., has opened her Summer home. She is accompanied by Miss G. L. Hubbard of Boston and Miss Caroline Dodge of Wenham, Mass.

Mrs. Edward S. Crocker, accompanied by Miss Gladys C. Gilman of Cambridge, Mass., arrived in a large touring car for an extended stay. They will be joined by Mr. Crocker later. Mrs. Crocker caught a handsome four-pound trout the second morning she was on the lake.

Among the more successful anglers this week, F. W. Emery, John S. Doane and J. G. Small of Boston stand well in the lead. Mrs. G. N. Proctor of Fitchburg, Mass., took a trio of trout that tipped the scales at just fourteen pounds. Miss Gladys Gilman of Cambridge, Mass., has been successful at fly fishing. Her largest salmon weighed 6½ pounds.

Judge and Mrs. James A. Morton of Fall River, Mass., are at the Upper Dam for a month. The Judge is an enthusiastic fisherman and has landed several beauties.

Mrs. N. F. Cowles of Boston has been "high line" this week, as well as last. Last week she broke all records by catching a nine-pound square-tailed trout—the largest fish of its kind ever taken at the lakes. This week she caught an eight-pound square-tailed trout besides several smaller ones.

Fred Comee of Boston, assistant manager of Boston Symphony Orchestra, has opened his log camp "Rouge-et-Noire," where he with a party of friends will spend the season.

SOCIETY NEWS ALONG THE FAMOUS NORTH SHORE

What Is Going on in the Popular Summer Resorts of New England.

Manchester-by-the-Sea, July 13.—Society from all along the North Shore was out in force at the annual rose show of the North Shore Horticultural Society, held on the grounds of the Essex County Club, Wednesday and Thursday. This was the first big social event of the year, and large numbers of the most prominent people on the shore took the opportunity to meet each other, and numerous little tea parties and gatherings were noted on the spacious piazzas of the clubhouse. Among those present were the Lester Lelands, the Claude Kilpatricks, the Judge William H. Moores, Mrs. James McMillan, Mrs. B. V. B. Crosby, Mrs. E. L. Wood, Mrs. John Reece, Mrs. J. Warren Merrill, Mrs. William Hooper and many others equally prominent in North Shore society.

The tennis season at the Essex County Club will open August 7, two tournaments commencing on that date, the ladies' handicap singles and the mixed doubles.

Among the recent arrivals at Manchester are the J. M. Grahams of Boston who came down the first of the week and are occupying the Merrill homestead at Smith's Point.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Warren Merrill have the larger Merrill cottage this year. They have as their guests this week Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hill of Augusta, Me. Mr. Hill is the son of Governor Hill of Maine.

Mrs. James McMillan entertained a party of young people at luncheon Thursday, in honor of her niece, Miss Grace Jarvis, who is her guest for the summer.

Commodore S. Parker Bremer, A. M. Merriam, George Wigglesworth, F. W. Fabyan, E. A. Boardman and Edward S. Grew, the entertainment committee of the Manchester Yacht Club, have arranged an interesting program for the season. Among the events scheduled is an entertainment for the children next Thursday afternoon. On Wednesday, July 31, [illegible] will take place, and the harbor decoration and procession of illuminated boats will occur on the 21st of next month.

Mrs. Russell Sturgis has been entertaining her son, S. Warren Sturgis, and Mrs. Sturgis at her Smith's Point place the past week. Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis will be here through this month. Mrs. Sidney Lord and son of the Fenway were guests of Mrs. Sturgis over the week-end.

The Charles E. Hodges of Brookline are among the recent comers to Manchester. They have taken the Dennis cottage for the Summer.

Magnolia

Magnolia, July 13.—The Summer season at Magnolia is now at its height, and there is a constant round of dinner and luncheon parties, while bridge and the game of skat serve to occupy many of the idle moments of the cottagers and hotel guests. At the New Magnolia the Sunday evening concerts have been renewed with increased popularity. Last Sunday an excellent programme was given, many cottagers being present.

The New Magnolia has been the Mecca for many automobile parties the past week, some coming down for a short stay, en route for other points along the Maine coast, while others have made this their final destination.

Mrs. George F. Warren of the Farms is planning a bridge tournament to be given July 26, in aid of the Students' Home of Boston. It will be given at the summer home of Mrs. Thomas M. McKee in the afternoon, and will be followed by a tea and cake sale for the benefit of the same charity.

Doings of Society at Beverly World of Fashion in Endless Pleasure Chase for Mid-Summer Gaieties.

New England Coast Is the National Playground of American Society.

By a Society Woman.

MERRILY the pleasure-chase progresses at the various fashionable New England resorts, and mid-summer gaieties are in full swing in these charmed haunts of the socially favored.

Newport and Bar Harbor are more alluring than ever. The North Shore and [illegible] as exclusive as American aristocracy can make [illegible] resorts [illegible] a long holiday.

The New England coast has become the national Summer playground for those of [illegible] who are learning to idle as luxuriously as their European cousins, and is now the acknowledged paradise of pleasure-seekers.

Mrs. Belmont Faces Lawsuits.

At Newport considerable excitement is manifest over the arrival there for the season of Mrs. [illegible] H. P. Belmont, formerly the wife of William K. Vanderbilt.

After her divorce from Mr. Vanderbilt Mrs. Belmont planned the entire rebuilding of Belcourt, Mr. Belmont's residence at Newport, which is the most [illegible] in that city. Not being satisfied, however, she, this Spring, ordered [illegible] and improvements to be made, at an outlay of [illegible]. As these improvements were not completed on a [illegible] date, Mrs. Belmont has now caused the discharge of architects, builders and decorators and has taken over the villa in a chaotic state, determined to finish the improvements at the expense of those she employed.

It is anticipated that Mrs. Belmont will be forced into the courts at the conclusion of her social season, to defend numerous lawsuits.

Engagement Causes Sensation.

An engagement announced this week, which has caused no end of a sensation in Newport's smartest set, is that of Miss Ada d'Acosta to Orren Root, Jr.

Miss d'Acosta is a sister of Mrs. Phil Lydig, and a noted beauty of New York and Newport, where she spends much time with her sister.

Mr. Root is a graduate of [illegible] College and a favorite nephew of Elihu Root.

Countess Comes to Bar Harbor.

Society at Bar Harbor is looking forward with much pleasure to the arrival there shortly of Countess [illegible] of New York, who has just returned from a brief tour of Europe and who has decided to spend the Summer at that fashionable resort as the guest of her father, Johnston Livingston.

The Countess is exceedingly well liked by the Summer colonists there, and her visit bids fair to be one gay round of entertainments, which are already being planned in her honor.

Another distinguished guest to spend the season there is Mr. Skybak, secretary of the Norwegian Legation, who the past week joined M. and Mme. Christian Hauge at the Moorings.

The Hauges have as usual a houseful of guests and in common with the other members of the diplomatic colony, entertain extensively during the Summer.

MRS GUY NORMAN

MRS. BRYCE J. ALLAN.

A [illegible] for ultra-fashionables, [illegible] the Beverlys carry off the honors this season. Boston was never [illegible] brilliantly represented there and among the charming matrons [illegible] as hostesses none entertain more royally than Mrs. Bryce Allan [illegible] Beacon street, whose handsome [illegible] at the cove is seldom without a half dozen or more house guests. Mrs. William D. Sohier, whose [illegible] Burgess Point, Beverly, is one of the show places of the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] well known sportsman and delights in his [illegible] horsemanship.

Mrs. Sohier, who before her marriage was [illegible], her pretty daughters, Eleanor and Alice, and her son, William D. Sohier, Jr., are among the [illegible] of the Beverly cottagers. Mrs. Sohier, like her husband, Colonel Sohier, is most devoted to her children and enters into the spirit of all their pleasures with enthusiasm and interest rivaling their own. According to present plans August will be a gala month at the Sohier villa, as house parties, dances and dinners for [illegible] are already planned.

Mrs. Norman, who was one of the three famous Palfrey girls, all noted for their good looks and popularity, and who is a member of the Boston [illegible], spending the winters in Washington, where she scores socially, is one of the most deservedly popular women in society. She takes special delight in her Beverly Farms residence and it is really only a society [illegible] of the highest order that lures [illegible] away from that cool retreat [illegible] months.

Reap Great Profits In Suburban Realty

Heavy Demand for House Lots in Oakdale Park, Dedham, a Suburban Beauty Spot.

HOW [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] home environment.

You can find these enjoyable advantages in Oakdale Park, Dedham. It is one of the most profitable [illegible] for investment with [illegible] the [illegible] dwe[illegible] Oakdale Park [illegible] ment [illegible] a [illegible]

Lots Snapped Up.

The rapidity with which Oakdale Park has blossomed forth testifies to its desirability. The first sod was turned in its development on May [illegible] with a week a fifty-foot [illegible] was put through the park and a [illegible]. [illegible] with the [illegible] building was the completion of [illegible] water pipes in the street and the planting of shade trees and grass plots between the sidewalk and the road. Then nearly one half of the total number of lots in Oakdale Park were sold within ten days.

The Securities Real Estate Company, No. 45 Milk street, one of the most successful and enterprising realty developing companies in New England, owned and developed Oakdale Park. It has a record [illegible] much less than [illegible] for sale [illegible] figure and on [illegible] past. Here is a spot [illegible] instance of the success of this latest enterprise of the Securities Real Estate Company—Oakdale Park. Sixty lots were originally developed. Fifty-five lots were sold within seven weeks. And several of these fifty-five lots have been resold at enormous profits, one lady making as high as 539 per cent on her investment.

No better transit accommodations are available to any suburb than to Oakdale Park. It is within four to twelve minutes' walk of four different railroad lines, as well as three electric car lines.

Still another reason for the growing demand for home sites in Oakdale Park and vicinity is the proximity of the large manufacturing plants of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad at Readville, twenty minutes' walk away, as well as the Sturtevant Blower Works.

Home-seekers have been far in the majority in the ranks of those who have bought lots in Oakdale Park. They grasped at the attractions it offered—the fine neighborhood, wide finished streets and building lots, clean and level, on very high elevation.

One of the innovations in the Oakdale Park development is the planting of a number of fruit trees on the property. One shade tree was placed in front of every lot and ten fruit trees—pear, apple, peach, plum and cherry—on each lot. These trees, three years old and about five feet high, will be bearing within four years.

Nearby Oakdale Park is the historic old Fairbanks estate, noted throughout New England. The house is the oldest colonial [illegible] in Dedham and belongs to the family of Vice President Fairbanks. The Henry Endicott property, the mansion of which was completed a year ago at a cost of $100,000, is another adjoining property.

The most fortunate investor in Oakdale Park realty is Miss Delia A. Bre[illegible], who bought one lot on May [illegible], 1907, as a permanent investment and paid the whole purchase price in cash. Later she saw the possibilities of an increase [illegible] lots over the price that the Securities Company was [illegible] for [illegible] are there [illegible].

Twenty-one days later through the Securities Company salesmen [illegible] she resold her lot, bought for speculation, at a profit of $342, which is equivalent to 539 per cent profit on her investment. She had only paid the first payment [illegible] and had sold before her first [illegible] payment had become due.

Judicious Investment.

Another woman investor, Mrs. Coakes, of Boston, bought two lots on May 11 and eighteen days later had resold one of her lots at a profit of 59 per cent on her investment. She had bought the lot outright for cash and her profit amounted to $227.

Another lot sold in May was re-sold by the customer within three weeks from the purchase date at a profit of $113.50. Similar instances in plenty could be cited, all tending to show the increase of land valuation after the development had begun.

Such profits, gained in an unusually short time, remind one of the New York land investment movement of the past few years. Anything like it has seldom been seen or heard of in Boston. It indicates the tendency of the growth of population in the Dedham direction.

The Oakdale Park lots may be thoroughly inspected on any Saturday afternoon or Sunday with agents ready to show the land to all prospective purchasers. An investment by the wage-earner is a move in the right direction.

BAR HARBOR PLANS VERY BUSY SEASON

BAR HARBOR, July 13.—At last Bar Harbor is to have real connection with the outside world by trolley to Ellsworth, there connecting with the Mount Desert branch of the Maine Central Railroad. A corporation known as the Mount Desert Transit Company, of which John S. The company has also bought fifty acres of land at Salisbury Cove. Preliminary surveys for the road are now in progress, and it is expected that the line will be in operation this Fall. By transferring from the steam cars to the trolley at Ellsworth, passengers may avoid the seven-mile steamboat trip across Frenchman's Bay.

A New and Great Romance of Politics, Love and Revenge

Begin It Here If Not Before

'A PRINCE OF SINNERS'

By F. Phillips Oppenheim

Synopsis

KINGSTON BROOKS, a young solicitor of Manchester, England, is selected, through the good offices of Peter Bullsom, as political agent for the Radical candidate for Parliament. He is overjoyed at his luck. That night he dines at Bullsom's home, meeting Mary Scott, Bullsom's niece, and Sophia and Selina, his daughters. He is much taken with Mary, but dislikes the others. The next day a strange caller tells him of the death of his father, of which Kingston never had heard the particulars. The visitor gives his name as the Marquis of Arranmore. Mr. Bullsom wishes to get into society for the sake of his girls, plans a party.

Mary Scott meets Kingston on the street and does [illegible]. They discuss the [illegible] of the working girls.

"SOME of the girls in our class, [illegible] out of work [illegible] who have any [illegible] seen to be [illegible] themselves a most [illegible] parents or some[illegible] Two of them [illegible] I have been trying [illegible] afternoon. I have been [illegible] which has made me [illegible] at heart—ashamed to [illegible] how we live, while [illegible] girls—they have known [illegible] I am afraid of what [illegible]

[illegible] boot and shoe [illegible] says that he can't [illegible] grave [illegible]. It is serious enough, God knows. The manufacturer tells us that he is suffering from American competition—here and in the Colonies. He tells us that the workpeople themselves are largely to blame, that their trades unions restrict them to such an extent that he is hopelessly handicapped from the start. But there are other causes. There is a terri[illegible] [illegible] principles of Free Trade."

"Not in the least. I wish I did."

"Some day we must have a talk about it. Henslow has made a very daring suggestion to-day. He had given us all plenty to think about. We are all agreed upon one thing. The crisis is fast approaching, and it must be faced. These people have the right to live, and they have the right to demand that legislation should interfere on their behalf."

"Maddening"

She sighed.

"It is a comfort to hear you talk like this," she [illegible] "it seems a most maddening to see so much suffering, so many people suffering, not only physically, but being dragged down into a lower moral state by [illegible] of circumstances and their surroundings, and all the time we educated people go on our way and live our lives as though nothing were happening—is that [illegible] responsibility [illegible] of misery at our doors. So few people stop to think. They won't understand. It is so easy to put things behind one."

"Come," he said cheerfully, "you and I, at last, [illegible] those. And there is a [illegible] which we owe to ourselves, too, [illegible] to others to look at [illegible] of things. Let us talk [illegible] less depressing."

"Yes," [illegible] suggested, "who is [illegible]"

"[illegible]," he answered, promptly.

"[illegible]"

"[illegible], of course. You may [illegible] I can assure you [illegible] sinecure. I never [illegible]"

"[illegible] is better than [illegible] After all more people die of [illegible] ever [illegible]."

"Nature meant me," he said, "for a lazy man. I have all the qualifications for a first-class idler. And circumstances and the misfortune of my opinions are going to keep me going at express speed all my life. I can see it coming. Sometimes it makes me shudder."

"You are too young," she remarked, "to shrink from work. I have no sympathy to offer you."

"I begin to fear, Miss Scott," he said, "that you are not what is called sympathetic."

She smiled, and the smile broke into a laugh, as though it were a transient idea rather than his words had pleased her.

"You should apply to my cousin Selina for that," she said. "Every one calls her most delightfully sympathetic."

"Sympathy," he remarked, "is either a heaven-sent joy—or a bore. It depends upon the individual."

"That is either enigmatical or rude," she [illegible]. "But after all, you don't know [illegible]"

"[illegible]," he [illegible]. "I have talked [illegible] with you—and I feel [illegible]"

"[illegible] for your feelings [illegible] "but I [illegible] that I don't know you well enough to be sitting here at tea with you even."

"I won't admit that," he answered, "but it was very nice of you to come."

"The fact of it was," she admitted, "my [illegible] were stronger than my sense of [illegible]. Now that [illegible] the latter are [illegible] themselves. And"

"Man I Detest"

She began to draw on her gloves. Just then a carriage with postilions and ladies [illegible] came clattering up the street, [illegible] marketing face.

"That is the sort of man I detest," she [illegible] her head toward the window. "You know whose carriage it is, don't you?"

He shook his head.

"No, I did not know that any one round here drove with postilions."

"It is the Marquis of Arranmore. He has a place at Lowton, I believe, but he is only here for a few months in the year."

Brooks started and leaned forward eagerly.

"Why do you hate him?" he asked. "What has he done?"

"Didn't you hear how he treated the Mayor when he went out for a subscription to the Unemployed Fund?"

Brooks shook his head.

"No, I have heard nothing."

"Poor old Mr. Wensome went out all that way purposely to see him. He was kept waiting an hour, and then when he explained his errand the Marquis laughed at him. 'My dear fellow,' he said, 'the poor people of Medchester do not interest [illegible] I do not go to the people who are better off than I am and ask them to help support me, nor do I see the least reason why those who are worse off than I am should expect me to support them.' Mr. Wensome tried to appeal to his humanity, and the brute only continued to laugh in a cynical way. He declared that poor people did not interest him. His tenants he was prepared to look after—outside his own property he didn't care a snap of the fingers whether people lived or died. Mr. Wensome said it was perfectly awful to hear him talk, and he came away without a penny. Yet his property in this country alone is worth fifty thousand a year."

"It is very surprising," Brooks said, thoughtfully. "The more surprising because I know of a kind action which he once did."

"Sh! They're coming here," she exclaimed. "That is the Marquis."

The omnibus had pulled up outside. A tall footman threw open the door, and held out his arm to the two ladies who descended. The Marquis and two other men followed. They trooped into the little place, bringing with them a strange flavor of another world. The women wore wonderful furs, and one who had ermine around her neck wore a great bunch of Neapolitan violets, whose perfume seemed to fill the room.

Acquaintances

"This is a delightful idea," the taller one said, turning toward her host. "An eight mile drive before tea sounded appalling. Where shall we sit, and may we have muffins?"

"There is nothing about your youth, Lady Sybil, which I envy more than your digestion," he answered, motioning them toward a table. "To be able to eat muffins with plenty of butter would be unallowed bliss. Nevertheless, you shall have them. No one has ever called me selfish. Let us have tea, and toast, and bread and butter and cakes, and a great many muffins, please, young lady," he ordered. "And will you send out some tea to my servants, please? It will save them from trying to obtain drinks from the hotel next door, and ensure us a safe drive home."

"And don't forget to send out for that pack of cards, Arranmore," the elder lady said. "We are going to play bridge driving home with that wonderful little electric lamp of yours."

"I will not forget," he promised. "We are to be partners, you know."

He was on the point of sitting down when he saw Brooks at the next table. He held out his hand.

"How do you do, Mr. Brooks?" he said. "I am glad to see that you are going to get your man in."

"Thank you," Brooks answered, rising and waiting for his companion, who was buttoning her gloves. "I was afraid that your sympathies would be on the other side."

"Dear me, no," the Marquis answered. "My enemies would tell you that I have neither sympathy nor politics, but I assure you that at heart I am a most devout Radical. I have a vote, too, and you may count upon me."

"I am very glad to hear it," Brooks answered. "Shall I put you down on the list 'to be fetched'?"

The Marquis laughed. "I'll come without," he declared. "I promise. Just remind me of the day."

He glanced toward Mary Scott, and for a moment seemed about to include her in some forthcoming remark. But whatever it might have been it was never made. She kept her eyes averted, and though her self-possession was absolutely unruffled she hastened her departure.

"I am not hurrying you, Mr. Brooks?" she asked.

"Not in the least," he assured her.

He raised his hat to the Marquis and his party, and the former nodded good-humoredly. There was silence until the two were in the street. Then one of the men who had been looking after them dropped his eyeglass.

"I tell you what," he said to his vis-a-vis. "There's some chance for us in Medchester after all. I don't believe Arranmore is popular amongst the ladies of his own neighborhood."

The Marquis laughed softly.

"She has a nice face," he remarked, "and I should imagine excellent perceptions. Curiously enough, too, she reminded me of some one who has every reason to hate me. But to the best of my belief I never saw her before in my life. Lady Caroom, that weird-looking object in front of you, is a teapot—and those are teacups. May I suggest a use for them?"

CHAPTER IV.

Henslow Speaks Out

THE bomb was thrown. Some ten thousand people, crowded together in the market place at Medchester, under what seemed to be one huge canopy of dripping [illegible], heard for the first time for many years a bold and vigorous attack upon the principles which had come to be considered a part of the commercial ritual of the country.

Henslow made the best of a great opportunity. He spoke temperately, but without hesitation, and concluded with a biting and powerful onslaught upon that class of Englishmen who wilfully closed their eyes to the prevailing industrial depression and endeavored to lure themselves and others into a sense of false security as to the well-being of the country by means of illusive statistics.

In his appreciation of dramatic effect and the small means by which an audience can be touched, Henslow was a past master. Early in his speech he waved aside the umbrella which a supporter was holding over him, and, regardless of the rain, he stood out in the full glare of the reflected gaslight, a ponderous, powerful figure.

Afterward, at the political club and at the committee room, there was much excited conversation concerning the effect of Henslow's bold speech. The general impression was, his election was now assured.

A shouting multitude followed him to his hotel, popular sentiment was touched, and even those who had been facing the difficulty of life with a sort of dogged despair for years were raised into enthusiasm. His words begat hope.

In the committee room there was much excitement and a good deal of speculation. Every one realized that the full effect of this daring plunge could not be properly [illegible] till after it had stood the test of print. But on the whole comment was strikingly optimistic. Brooks for some time was absent. In the corridor he had come face to face with Mary Scott. Her eyes flashed with pleasure at the sight of him, and she held out her hand frankly.

"You heard it all?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes, every word. Tell me, you understand these things so much better than I. Is this an election dodge, or is he in earnest? Was he speaking the truth?"

"The honest truth, I believe," he answered, leading her a little away from the crowd of people. "He is of course pressing this matter home for votes, but he is very much in earnest himself about it."

The Right Track?

"And you thing that he is on the right track?"

"I really believe so," he answered. "In fact, I am strongly in favor of making experiments in the direction he spoke of. By the bye, Miss Scott, I have something to tell you. You remember telling me about Lord Arranmore and his refusal to subscribe to the Unemployed Fund?"

"Yes."

"He has been approached again—the facts have been more fully made known to him, and he has sent a check for one thousand pounds."

WOMEN WHO CHARM
Health Is the First Essential Toward Making a Woman Attractive.

MISS HULDA KUGHLER MISS ELIZABETH WYNN

There is a beauty and attractiveness in health which is far greater than mere regularity of feature.

A sickly, irritable, and complaining woman always carries a cloud of depression with her; she is not only unhappy herself but is a damper to all joy and happiness when with her family and friends.

It is the bright, healthy, vivacious woman who always charms and carries sunshine wherever she goes.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging and that everything tires her; if her feminine system fails to perform its allotted duties, there is nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, and irregularities, causing constant misery and melancholia, she should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs will dispel all these troubles. By correcting the cause of the trouble it cures where other treatment may have failed.

Miss Elizabeth Wynn, of No. 205 8th Avenue, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"For months I suffered with dreadful headaches, pain in the back and severe hemorrhages. I was weak and out of sorts all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me when all other medicine had failed. It seemed to be just what I needed and quickly restored my health."

Miss Hulda Kughler, of No. 25, West 15th Street, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"For months I was ill with an internal trouble. I suffered terrible agony, was nervous, irritable, and sick all the time. I took different medicines without benefit. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and within six months I was completely restored to health and I want to recommend it to every suffering woman."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions, backache, bloating (or flatulence), displacements, inflammation or ulceration, that bearing-down feeling, dizziness, indigestion, or nervous prostration may be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

Be Sure to Get What You Ask For.

THERE is a Reason—
Why the Good People of America buy Cascarets as Fast as the Clock Ticks.

Every second some one, somewhere, is Buying a little Ten-Cent Box of Cascarets.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6—60 times to the Minute, 60 Minutes to the Hour, 3600 Boxes an Hour, 36,000 Boxes a Day of Ten Hours, 1,080,000 Boxes a Month, and then some.

Think of it 220,000 People take a Cascaret tablet each day. Millions use Cascarets when necessary.

The Judgment of Millions of Bright Americans is Infallible. They have been Buying and Taking Cascarets at that rate for over Six years.

* * *

Over Five Millions of Dollars have been Spent to make the merits of Cascarets known, and every cent of it would be lost, did not sound merit claim and hold the constant, continued friendship, Patronage and Endorsement of well-pleased people year after year.

* * *

There is also a Reason—

Why there are Parasites who attach themselves to the Healthy Body of Cascaret's success—imitators, Counterfeiters, Substitutors.

They are Trade Thieves who would rob Cascarets of the "Good Will" of the people, and sneak unearned profits, earned and paid for by Cascarets.

A Dishonest Purpose means a Dishonest Product and a Disregard of the Purchasers' Health or Welfare.

Beware of the Slick Salesman and his ancient "Just as Good" story that common sense refutes.

Cascarets are made only by the Sterling Remedy Company, and put up in metal box with the "long-tailed C" on the cover. They are never sold in bulk. Every tablet marked "CCC."

Be sure you get the genuine.

BAR JAP SPIES, WASHINGTON NAVY YARD ORDERS.

New Edict Issued by Commandant Forbids Making of Sketches.

TWO CAUGHT AND EJECTED

Government Officials Stirred by the Detection to Rigid Action.

BLAME JAPAN'S WAR PARTY

Belief Grows That a Systematized Effort at Spying Is Being Made.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—Japanese spies have been detected in the work of gathering information in the Washington navy yard, the government's big gun foundry. Rear Admiral Leutze, commandant, to prevent their future operations, has issued the following order:

"The supervisory force in all shops will see that visitors do not make sketches unless they have a permit. If they see anyone so doing they will inform them politely that it is prohibited."

The order was brought forth by the action of two Japanese several days ago. The matter has been kept secret until to-day. A naval officer had his attention called to the two Japanese who were sketching guns, and had them summarily ejected from the government reservation. The order of Admiral Leutze is now posted in every building in the yard, and every man in the navy yard has been made familiar with it. No person shall be allowed to make sketches of any of the buildings or works unless that person has a permit so to do.

Commandant Makes Denial.

Although the employees of the navy yard know of the fact of the Japanese being thrown out and keep their eyes open for not only people who have paper and pencil in their hands, but also for any suspicious looking characters loitering around, Commandant Leutze declined to admit this morning that the incident ever happened. When questioned about it he said:

"I do not think that can be so, it seems to me I would have heard of it if it had happened."

In spite of this statement, however, employees of the yard and several officers, who saw the affair, and others, who have heard the talk about it, declare there is no doubt about it. Also, there is the commandant's order putting everybody on guard against a repetition of any sketching of the works by the Japanese or any other unauthorized persons.

Situation Considered Grave.

The news of the detection of the Japanese spies working in Washington assumes graver meaning in connection with the report that a Japanese spy engaged in similar work was found at Fort Rosecrans in California. Government officials here have no assurance that similar work has not been done or may not be done or attempted in all the military strongholds of the United States.

Officials of the navy department deplore any such occurrence, particularly at this time, as it occurred simultaneously with the visit to the yard this morning of Commander Arisaka, of Admiral Yamamoto's party.

Two days ago the department received a telegram from Rear Admiral Evans stating that Commander Arisaka desired to visit the Washington yard. Admiral Yamamoto's time in this country was cut shorter on account of the heat, and it was decided that he would not attempt to visit all the yards personally.

Japan's War Party Blamed.

The request of Admiral Evans was promptly granted, and credentials were provided for Commander Arisaka. It was stated at the navy department to-day that there was no information on the subject, no report whatever having been received from Rear Admiral Leutze.

Fire Endangers Lynn Gas Plant as Factory Is Blown High in Air

Huge Naphtha and Gas Tanks in Range of Flames Imperilled Firemen's Lives.

By a gas explosion in the plant of the Q. A. Towns Extracting Company on Shepard street, Lynn, near the big plant of the Lynn gas works at 10:15 o'clock last night the roof was blown off the extracting company's one-story wooden building.

There was no one in the building when the explosion took place. The damage to the plant was about $15,000, mostly to leather from which grease was to be extracted.

Gas Tank in Danger.

The explosion was heard all over Lynn, and inside of ten minutes thousands had gathered on Shepard street, believing that the gas works had been blown up.

Two alarms of fire were sent in. When the firemen arrived the flames were shooting toward the gas company's largest tank, 100 feet away, and sparks were falling among 5,000 barrels of grease in a neighboring field.

Underneath the extracting ovens in which the explosion occurred were several thousand gallons of naphtha, which every moment it was expected would ignite and explode.

Firemen Work in Peril.

Despite the terrible danger to which they were exposed, the firemen stuck to their posts and soon had the flames under control.

E. F. Dunbar, superintendent of the extracting company, says that when he left the works last night he told the two night men, P. E. Holmes and Z. H. Wilson, whom he left there, to open the extracting ovens between 10 and 11 o'clock.

They opened them at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes later they had left the plant.

P. E. Chase, chief electrician at the Gas & Electric Company's plant, says one explosion took place.

It was followed by three others. The second one blew the roof off the building.

Mr. Chase hurried to the extracting company's buildings and released a St. Bernard dog which was whining inside the gates.

Riot in Avery Place Calls 2,000 People; Two Go to Hospital

There was a riot on Avery street last night, in which two men, Harry Pearlstein of Bennett street and Martin Ryan of Dorchester were so seriously injured that they had to be treated at the Emergency Hospital and several others received cuts, bruises and black eyes.

The trouble started when some young men passing through Avery street stopped to watch several others drinking from bottles in Avery place.

Immediately one of the bottle drinkers shouted:

"Let us wipe out the Jews," and the fight was on.

Inside of five minutes fully 2,000 people had gathered from the theatres, from Washington and Tremont streets, and it was not long before five or six distinct fights were in progress.

Some one telephoned police headquarters but when a squad of officers arrived from the Lagrange street station the fights had stopped and no one was willing to identify any of the participants.

Pearlstein and Ryan walked to the hospital and left for home after Ryan had his torn ear sewed and attention had been given to two black eyes which Pearlstein had accumulated.

Ideal Beach Day, Is Glad Promise Of Weather Man

This ought to be an ideal beach day. So far as the Weather Man could see last night the low humidity and moderate temperature that made the Saturday half holiday a splendid one will prevail over Sunday, and it isn't often that a day in the middle of July is so bearable.

There was just enough wind to drive away the last suggestion of oppression, and the thermometer never rose above 82, which point it reached at 4 P. M., then slowly descending. The humidity ranged from 48 to 56.

In spite of the beautiful day four persons were overcome and taken to the Relief Hospital. They were James D. Wesley, aged 85, Charles W. Hill, aged 24, John McClellan, aged 37, and W. [illegible] Montgomery, aged 55.

Last night two more prostrations were reported, making six in all.

Mark A. Ryan, aged twenty-six, fell from his wagon seat at Purchase and Broad streets, overcome by the heat, and dislocated his arm.

Mikhael Passarza, aged forty, fell down stairs at No. 99 Washington street because of faintness caused by the heat. He was taken to the Relief Station.

GRAFTER PROCTOR'S BROTHER-IN-LAW NAMED BY LODGE AS SECRETARY.

Ted Clark's Choice to Succeed Fugitive Astonishes Even Republican Politicians.

EFFORT TO HUSH SCANDAL

Appointment Taken as Hint From Senator to Make Proctor "Misstep" Closed Incident.

WHERE IS "LODGE'S MAN"?

Over a Year Since His Conviction for Stealing $225, but He Is Not in Jail.

"TED" CLARK, whom United States Sentor Lodge has just chosen as his private secretary, to succeed Robert G. Proctor convicted grafter and fugitive from justice, is "Bob" Proctor's brother-in-law.

Nothing in the whole history of the Proctor case—the accusation of theft, the indictment, the trial, the rush of prominent Republicans to the rescue, the verdict of "guilty," and Proctor's final default—has created more surprise among Republican politicians than the appointment of Proctor's young brother-in-law to succeed him as Senator Lodge's confidential man.

Neither a Bay Stater.

Strictly speaking, neither Proctor nor Clark is a Massachusetts man. Proctor never was a Bay Stater except as he came north now and then with the Senator. When he was arrested for stealing $225 on the complaint of John G. Bestger of Quincy, money which Bestgen says he meant for the Republican campaign fund of 1904, Proctor found it expedient to give a Massachusetts address. He took for that purpose the house in Sea avenue, Hough's Neck, Quincy, where he had spent the preceding Summer.

But Poctor is really a Maryland man. The best information to be obtained hereabouts says that the fugitive secretary and convicted grafter was a Baltimore man who studied shorthand and typewriting in Washington, several years ago obtained a minor clerkship in the Lodge retinue and then, by application and faithful attention to the best interests of his chief, climbed to the private secretaryship and held on. "He does everything for Lodge," was what they used to say in Washington, "except deliver his speeches and go walking with the President."

Proctor married Alice, the eldest daughter of the Rev. Isaac Clark, now connected with the Howard University for colored students at Washington. The new secretary is Mrs. Proctor's younger brother.

Young Mr. Clark made his local advent in the rooms of the Republican State Committee as Lodge's secretary a week or ten days ago. He made a good impression on everybody. Nobody there has had much to say to him about Bob Proctor, the evident disposition of all the powers being to look upon the Proctor "misstep" as a closed incident. "Proctor was a good fellow," they say, "who was spending more than he had to spend and who ran against the inevitable end of all such spenders."

Where Is Proctor?

Senator Lodge's selection of the Proctor brother-in-law, moreover, is taken as a general hint to everybody about headquarters that the least said about Proctor the better.

Meanwhile, where is Bob Proctor? More than a year has passed since Proctor was found guilty of stealing the $225. Nearly two months have passed since Proctor's personal bond of $500 cash was forfeited and Proctor declared to be a fugitive from justice. At about that time he was said to have been in or about Goldfields, Nev. He has not been located there. He is supposed to be in Washington or Baltimore.

What pull or influence restrains the authorities from going after him? Why isn't Proctor beginning the ten months in the House of Correction at Deer Island to which Judge DeCourcey sentenced him? These questions will not down.

Lodge's appointment of Proctor's brother-in-law, Ted Clark, to the place made vacant by Proctor's resignation under indictment, has served to reopen the Proctor matter wider than ever, and to give it new publicity. There are those who believe that the police might be asking the new secretary for the address of the old secretary.

MR. HARRIMAN—"HE'S GUILTY!"

Declared a violator of Federal laws in great railroad transactions throughout country, in report of Interstate Commerce Commission.

HARRIMAN CRIMINAL UNDER U. S. LAW, SAYS INTERSTATE REPORT

Railroad Colossus Sharply Condemned by Commerce Commission for High-Handed Merger Tactics.

CONSOLIDATION METHODS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY

POLITICAL TRICK, SAYS HARRIMAN

Washington, July 13.—That Edward H. Harriman, the railroad king, is guilty of maintaining a gigantic railroad and steamship combination in restraint of interstate and foreign commerce, an offence punishable by a fine and imprisonment of not less than six months, is the conclusion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which made public to-day its report of the inquiry into the Harriman-Union Pacific absorption of the Southern Pacific railroad.

The commission calls his various financial deals, by which he acquired the Southern Pacific, the Chicago & Alton and various other roads, "indefensible financiering," and in many paragraphs of the report mercilessly scores Mr. Harriman for his methods.

Made Millions in Deal.

In one railroad deal he is accused of having bloated the stocks of the road he secured control of and then manipulated them so that he and his associates won millions while the original stockholders were the victims.

Mr. Harriman to-night made partial answer to the charges of the commission. He said he would make a full statement later.

Among other things, he said:

"It is deemed good politics to attack me. But I can stand it much better than the people of this country can stand that sort of procedure on the part of the Government tribunals charged with the duty of impartially administering the laws."

"Wrong," Says Harriman.

"I shall study it carefully and have something to say about it later. But from what I am told it is full of strange misstatements of fact.

"For example, in reference to the Chicago and Alton, it says that I caused about $12,000,000 to be credited to construction expenditures in order to find an excuse for borrowing money to pay dividends.

"As a matter of fact that was a written recommendation made by President Felton when I was in Alaska, and it was adopted by the board of directors at a meeting at which I was not present.

"Again, it is said that a certain method of accounting that was carried out would have the effect of covering up the payment of the special dividend, thereby intimating some wrongful concealment. This is a most extraordinary statement for the writer of the report to make when it is considered that the stockholders necessarily knew of the dividend, because every one received his share, and when it was published in every financial journal at the time, and was reported to the Stock Exchange and shown on its printed lists. The suggestion, therefore, of any reason or desire for concealment is most unfair.

"I am informed by those who have examined it more carefully that the article is full of errors as glaring and inexcusable as these, but I shall read it carefully and make a full statement about it, particularly of my connection with the Chicago & Alton readjustment, in a few days."

The Interstate Commerce Commission does not recommend the imposi-

SHOOTS 2; TAKEN IN MAD PURSUIT

Italian Chased by Hundreds in Chelsea After Wounding Man Before Girl.

After shooting Edward J. O'Brien of No. 111 Broadway, Chelsea, in Winnisimmet street, Chelsea, last night, an Italian named Antonio Beino was chased through the streets by hundreds of pursuers and captured by police.

While fighting to escape he shot Max Selden of No. 67 West Third street and another man.

O'Brien fell wounded into the arms of his sweetheart, Mamie Burns, who had been waiting for him at Park and Winnisimmet streets. He was removed to Frost Hospital, where it was found that a bullet from the Italian's revolver had penetrated his cheek.

With O'Brien when he was shot was his friend Edward Hagen of No. 144 Williams street, Chelsea. Hagen's face was burned with powder.

None of the men who were shot were severely injured. The streets were crowded with shoppers and with pleasure seekers at the time.

The Italian after the shooting ran to No. 31 Beacon street. This is a three-story brick building. He dashed to the third floor. There he found a ladder that led to the roof. He climbed up to the roof and pulled the ladder up after him.

Persons who had seen him go to the roof notified Policemen Parsons, Twombley and Bradley, who were in the searching party. Twombley and Parsons followed to the roof. The runaway went through a skylight into No. 33 Beacon street and running through that house, followed by the police, he tumbled out into the street, in to the arms of Policeman Bradley, who arrested him.

He had thrown away his revolver and refused to make any statement.

Quarrel on Ferryboat.

The quarrel which caused the shooting began on the Chelsea ferry boat which left Boston at 9.15 p. m. O'Brien and Hagen quarreled with three Italians. When they all left the boat they walked up Winnisimmett street. O'Brien ran into a pool room and grabbing a billiard cue, came out and struck one of the Italians on the head.

Whipping out a revolver, the Italian fired. O'Brien fell, wounded, and the Italian ran, pursued by hundreds of men and boys.

Max Selden ran into the street in an attempt to stop the fugitive. The Italian shot at him, wounding him slightly.

Another man who ran into the street to seek to stop the Italian was also shot at, but the Italian missed him.

The two Italians who had been with Beino had not been caught up to an early hour this morning.

LINER TOO SWIFT; 250 WAIT ON BOARD

Sarmatian Surprises Port Officials by Getting in Two Days Ahead of Time.

The usually reliable Allan Liner, Sarmatian, which is not touted up to be anything but a twelve-day boat, created a scandal along the water front yesterday by coming into port over two days ahead of time.

For all her unseemly haste, the giddy old ship didn't make much by it. For the Allan line, not expecting her was unprepared to give her dock room and to attend to discharging her passengers and cargo. So the Sarmatian and her 250 passengers and freight had to lay out in the stream last night just the same.

Company Unprepared.

It is no light thing for an ocean liner to come in ahead of time. The company is unprepared, so are the customers, the immigration service, the 'longshoremen, stevedores, baggage and expressmen and all the interests that wait on the big steamers.

The Sarmatian was expected to-morrow. The first known of her haste was when the marine observer at Hull 'phoned the Chamber of Commerce that the Sarmatian was coming in. "Please repeat," said the Chamber of Commerce. The observer asserted it was the Sarmatian.

Then the Chamber of Commerce tipped off the Customs Office, the Allan Line and the Immigration Service. The Allan Line docking force at Mystic Wharf had made no preparation to receive the Sarmatian till to-morrow. It was decided that the vessel must lay out in the stream till to-day at least.

Suspect Vessel in Channel.

Immigration Commissioner George B. Billings figured that if his inspectors waited for the vessel to dock they would have to put in the Sunday inspecting. So he borrowed the Customs' launch and went out to the Sarmatian and did the inspecting there. The Immigration Service got along nicely on the Sarmatian, having only fifty-two second-cabin and 193 steerage passengers to look over.

The immigration officers found thirty Bulgarians tagged for one address in Toledo, O., and nineteen more addressed to the same street and number in Scranton, Penn. They didn't declare it was "contract labor" but they did think it a coincidence worth noting officially.

So far as the immigration service goes, the passengers, except those who would be detained in any case, can go ashore, but they will have to wait till the vessel gets a docking place to-day.

Captain Henry says that, if it hadn't been for a fog that bothered the liner last Friday, she would have been in yesterday morning instead of late in the afternoon.

SIX HURT IN TWO AUTO ACCIDENTS

Touring Car Crashes Into Coal Team, Injuring Two—Another Dashes Into Wall.

Six people were injured in two automobile accidents closely following each other in Quincy yesterday afternoon.

Shortly after 5 o'clock B. D. Solomon of Monroe street, Roxbury, driving his own auto, crashed into a coal team driven by William Connell of Hingham. Both men were thrown to the ground and Solomon was rendered unconscious. For some unknown reason he was allowed to lay there for over fifteen minutes, when he was picked up by another machine. He was badly bruised all over his body. Connell received severe scalp wounds.

The accident occurred on Hancock street. Solomon was headed down the street towards Nantasket Beach. He was running abreast of a [illegible] when he met the coal team and another auto coming in the opposite direction. In trying to avoid the auto he crashed into the coal team.

Less than a quarter later a large touring car driven by Charles Dennison of Winchester, in turning the corner of Daxter street and Brown avenue, Quincy, broke the front axle, crashed into a tree and then slipped against a stone wall, throwing the six men [illegible] to the ground and injuring four of them seriously.

The four who were injured are James Knowles of Brockton, collar bone broken, badly shaken up; Robert Benny of Brockton, fractured skull and severe bruises about the body; William Butler of Brockton, badly bruised and badly shaken up. The other two men in the car were not injured and their names were not taken.

The car was headed from Hingham to Brockton. Near the corner of Brown avenue on Daxter street, they met a team which stopped. The auto tried to make the corner into Brown avenue but turned too sharply, breaking the axle.

DECIDE ON NEWTON CAR STRIKE MONDAY

The Newton street car men at a meeting last night voted to postpone strike action until Monday morning at 9 o'clock, when the matter will be settled definitely.

President Lucius Tuttle of the New England branch of the Civic Federation, President Samuel Powers and Director James L. Richards of the Newton Street Railway Company held a private conference here last night.

On Monday morning, National Organizer Walsh and Treasurer Orr, representing the carmen, will meet President Powers, who will then tell them what the final decision of the company is.

NEVADA KEEPS WOMEN FROM PUBLIC OFFICE

Reno, Nev., July 13.—A legal decision given the Nevada State Board of Education by Judge Talbot of the Supreme Court prevents appointment of any woman as district school superintendent under the new law, and the example set, the women believe, will keep them from holding public office in the State of Nevada.

There is doubt on the part of some whether women in Nevada can legally be appointed notaries public. The number of notaries can be increased without limit at the discretion of the Governor, according to a lately passed statute.

CLUE TO MURDERER IN BLACK HAND NOTE

Man Who Has Been Aiding Police Solve Mystery Get Letter Warning Him to Stop.

New York, July 13.—A "Black Hand" letter may prove the clue to the umrderers of Julius Rosenheimer, a wealthy Pelham manufacturer.

The letter was adressed to Benjamin W. Scott, who was held up by two men shortly before the murder near Rosenheimer's home. Scott had been helping the police and the latter warned him to desist, saying:

"You stop this business or we will kill you. BLACK HAND."

A skull and cross bones and a coffin, rudely drawn, decorated the letter. It was mailed from New York ten days ago.

The police have from the first intimated the Rosenheimer attack may have been a Black Hand outrage and they are now trying to trace the authors.

Pie Trust 'Busted' by Federal Order Ruling Out Preservatives

No More Benzoics or Benzoates May Be Used, Decides Department of Agriculture.

It's all up with the pie trust.

Despatches from Washington say that the Department of Agriculture yesterday ruled that after this season's canning no benzoate of soda or benzoic acid can be used to preserve foods.

Up to the end of the present season one-tenth of one per cent of these materials may be used by canners who have been accustomed to preserve their food products that way. But every package of food product containing such per cent. must be plainly marked. And, after this season, the benzoics and the benzoates must be "cut out" wholly.

This is an awful blow to the wholesale pie bakers. The big combination of pie foundries known as the "Pie Trust" has been using these chemicals liberally in their product, in order to keep them sweet. They have stuffed them with benzoate and benzoic and sent the result out, labelled "As Mother Used to Make."

It now looks as though the pie belt would have to go back to genuine "Home Made," instead of startling its stomach with the factory brand.

GIVE LAWN PARTY TO SAVE OLD CHURCH

Women Raise Funds by Fete at Theodore Parker's Former Pulpit Home.

A lawn party was given under direction of several women of the Roslindale Unitarian Church last night on the grounds of the old Second Church of West Roxbury, Theodore Parker's former pulpit home, to raise funds to save the old church which is not now in use.

A large number of Roslindale and West Roxbury people attended.

The women in charge of the party included Mrs. S. M. Bowles, Mrs. E. H. Hodgkins, Mrs. M. F. Fofassett and Mrs. Bernard Whitman. Dr. Charles Nichols assisted them in making arrangements.

JAPANESE ADMIRAL DECLARES THERE WILL BE NO WAR.

Baron Yamamoto Scores "Jingo" Press of Japan and U. S. for Inciting It.

COMING HERE TO-MORROW

Will Inspect Big Fore River Shipyard With Admiral Bowles as Escort.

TO BE TENDERED BANQUET

Admiral Baron Yamamoto, Japan's great naval officer who is visiting the United States and who is expected in Boston to-morrow, now knows from personal observation the capacity of some of the American shipyards for turning out war ships. His knowledge was gained on a visit yesterday to the League Island Navy Yard and the great Cramp yard at Philadelphia.

With striking significance, after his inspection tour, the Japanese admiral gave a fresh interview to reporters declaring there will be no war between Japan and the United States. He scored the "jingo" press of [illegible] this country and Japan for having incited [illegible] talk. Last night the admiral returned to New York to keep engagements with his countrymen who called on him in large numbers. To-day he will be the guest of General Fred Grant at his headquarters on Governor's Island for luncheon. This afternoon he will be taken about the lower city for a peep at New York's sky-scrapers.

Visits Navy Yard.

The Baron's presence in Boston, however, will be purely unofficial, like the trip he is making through the country. He will be entertained, nevertheless, in a manner befitting his rank and the services he has rendered his native country. He will come here from Philadelphia where he yesterday inspected the Navy Yard.

He will arrive in Boston to-morrow afternoon, coming to the Back Bay station. He will be met there by Rear Admiral Francis T. Bowles, president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company. President Bowles will take Baron Yamamoto to Quincy in an automobile. The Baron will make a thorough inspection of the Fore River plant, returning to Boston at 6 o'clock.

He will go to the Hotel Touraine, where he will be met by a committee from the Union Club, which will escort him to a dinner to be given him at the club at 6 p. m. At the dinner the Baron will meet Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., Adjutant General Parker, Admiral Edgar A. S. Snow and Captain W. A. Marshal of the Charlestown Navy Yard and Admiral Potter of Vermont.

Goes to Montreal.

The Baron will leave the Union Club in time to catch the 9.30 express for Montreal to-morrow night. He will be in Boston about eight hours.

Friday Baron Yamamoto met President Roosevelt for the first time. The meeting was especially interesting as President Roosevelt played so large a part in bringing about peace between Japan and Russia. The Baron met President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, making the trip in a private car from New York. At Sagamore Hill the President and the Baron had a long talk.

The Japanese refused to discuss their call upon the President, but later Secretary Loeb gave out a brief statement in which it was said that the Baron's visit confirmed in every way the thoroughly good understanding between the two governments and the fundamental friendliness between the two nations.

GOVERNMENT QUIETLY SENDS WAR SUPPLIES TO THE PHILIPPINES

Washington, July 13.—It is admitted, but not openly yet, that the "next" vessel to leave San Francisco with a large part of the cargo, consisting of torpedoes, mines an other offensive and defensive stuff, will and other offensive and defensive stuff, will 25th of this month.

This "next" vessel is the transport Cook. It is learned, however, that there have been already large lots of material sent out to the Philippines.

The preparations of the United States will be added to materially by the battleships themselves so far as the West coast is concerned. It is assumed here by officers that everyone of the battleships going to the Pacific will have more than sufficient magazine supplies.

"RED DEVIL" PICNIC BARTLETT JUBILEE

The annual Summer outing of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Ward 20, known as the "Red Devils," will be held next Saturday at Squantum Beach, and will attract the attention of all the political leaders of the State.

Everything is being done to make this the most successful Democratic political gathering so far of the present century. All the party leaders will be present, and the opening shot of the Fall campaign will undoubtedly be heard. The occasion will also give an oportunity to meet General Bartlett, the candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Elected O'Connell.

The "Red Devils" are no mean power in a political fight. The organization, though not very old, is well known for its peculiarly successful methods of reducing Republican majorities.

Last Fall the Young Men's Democratic Club, fighting fiercely for control, turned out the old ward committee and thoroughly reconstructed the organization. They succeeded in rallying the Democratic and a large number of Republican voters to the polls, and elected the first vice-president of the club, Joseph F. O'Connell, to Congress.

Thayer Will Speak.

The dinner this year will be on a larger scale than usual and will bring together more than four hundred pols, not including invited guests.

Mayor Fitzgerald will be one of the speakers. Congressman John R. Thayer of Worcester is coming, and will probably make a speech that will be interesting. Ex-Mayor John H. H. McNamee of Cambridge, now a resident of Ward 24, will also be a special guest. The other speakers will include Senator Vahey, John B. Moran, Chairman Feeney of the Democratic State Committee and Joseph A. Dennison.

Congressman O'Connell, the big chief of the Red Devil Democracy, and a staunch supporter of Bartlett, is arranging the outing. General Bartlett is one of the high privates of the Red Devil Democracy, and has the unanimous support of the Ward 20 organization, supported by Congressman O'Connell.

The dinner will be at 2.30 sharp and the Inn can be reached by trains from the South Station to Atlantic, or trolley cars from any part of Boston to Neponset, where cars can be taken to Squantum.

LEADERS IN BIG CATHOLIC WOMEN'S MOVEMENT.

Under their guidance the L. C. B. A. has become the most powerful organization of [illegible] existence. It was the first women's life insurance company ever incorporated, and its membership [illegible] 100,000.

STRIKE IN L. C. B. A. OVER ITS OFFICERS

Anonymous Appeal Asks That Present Board Be Deposed at National Meeting.

HUB DELEGATES SCORN IT

Charges of [illegible] extravagance and even hints at graft have stirred up [illegible] in the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, one of the leading women fraternal organizations of the country, whose national triennial convention is to open next Tuesday in Springfield.

Among the thousand or more delegates to this convention will be representatives of the two Boston branches of the association. Announcement was given out here during the week of plans for the convention. Attention was called to the remarkable success of the association. On top of this, there came from New York last night news of the charges which had been anonymously circulated, condemning the administration forces of the organization.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. McGowan of Buffalo, N. Y., has been president of the L. C. B. A. ever since its inception in 1890. While the charges did not name Mrs. McGowan specifically, yet their tone was so anti-administration that they amount to an attack upon her.

Defends President.

A prominent Boston member of the association is Miss Katherine Conway, editor of the Boston Pilot. She lives at No. 1 Atherton place, Roxbury, and is connected with the Roxbury branch of the L. C. B. A. Miss Conway said last night:

"I have known Mrs. McGowan, our president, for several years personally. I would say that any charges made against her administration or character are too contemptible [illegible] worthy of publication. If there is [illegible] movement against Mrs. McGowan's administration it [illegible] worthy of [illegible]."

Among [illegible] delegates to the Springfield [illegible] are Miss Mary Hagerty, of No. 41 [illegible] Brookline street, South End, who is president of the Holy Cross Cathedral branch in this city. Dr. Laura A. C. Hughes, of No. 98 Huntington avenue, ex-president of Holy Cross Cathedral branch and medical examiner for it at present, is a first delegate.

This organization, which was incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania in 1889-90, was the first exclusively women's fraternal life insurance association in the world. In this comparatively short time it has passed beyond the experimental stage and is now recognized as one of the most successful and substantial life insurance associations in the United States.

The fact that it has been put upon so firm a basis reflects credit upon its executive officers, who, by tact and tireless efforts, have achieved these results. During the past three years they have paid to beneficiaries of deceased members of the association $2,069.25, and they have a balance on hand of nearly $1,000,000. The association has over 100,000 members.

100 Priests Present.

The convention opens the morning of July 16 with Pontifical high mass at the Cathedral. The Right Rev. Thomas D. Beaven, D. D., Bishop of Springfield, will officiate, assisted by 100 priests. The Right Rev. Bernard J. McQuaid, Bishop of Rochester, the supreme spiritual adviser of the association, will be present in the sanctuary. Special music, with orchestra and full Cathedral choir, will be a feature of this ceremony.

Immediately after services the convention will proceed to the Central High Shool Hall and formally open with addresses by Mayor Sanderson of Springfield, Senator William P. Hayes and Bishop McQuaid, to be followed by the reading of reports by the officers of the order.

Mrs. Margaret J. Farrell of Manchester, N. H., supreme auditor of the New England district, who is up for re-election, was the first deputy and organizer in this part of the country. To her executive tact and pleasing persistance is due the active part New England plays in this progressive organization.

Boston Women Present.

Dr. Laura A. C. Hughes represents the Boston branch of the organization which is identified with the cathedral and of which Miss Catherine E. Conway is a trustee.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. McGowan of Buffalo, N. Y., supreme president, was practically the organizer of this association. She was unanimously elected supreme president at the preliminary convention in 1890, and has been enthusiastically re-elected at each succeeding session.

To Mrs. Johanna A. Royer of Erie, Pa., the supreme recording officer, is due much of the credit for the flourishing financial condition of the organization which prides itself upon its wide extension and the payment of beneficiary claims without litigation.

Miss Margaret Kelley of Cleveland, O., supreme auditor, has organized more branches than any other officer in the organization. Mrs. Mary H. Murphy of Buffalo, N. Y., president of the board of auditors, is one of the bright lights of the organization.

During the convention, which will last about eight or ten days, the local committee, under the management of Miss Mary Davit, has many delightful affairs planned for the entertainment of the delegates.

FORT PREBLE FALLS IN MIMIC BATTLE

Newport, July 13.—Fort Preble to-night capitulated to forces from Fort Wetherell after three hours' constant manoeuvering on the part of both forces in the mimic war game that is being carried on by the Rhode Island Militia.

As Fort Wetherell is supposed to be located on neutral ground the decision as to the real outcome of to-night's manoeuvres will have to be settled by an umpire. However the Fort Preble forces are now occupying the stronghold and have already commenced operations against Fort Adams near Newport.

Shortly before midnight a demonstration was being made towards the southern boundary of the fort, but the Fort Adams forces had held the invaders in check up to midnight.

CARRIED HOMEBY AUTO THAT HIT HER

Miss Sarah Trainer, who is twenty-five years old and lives at Hampton court, Brookline, was knocked down by an automobile in Brookline village last night.

The report of the case gives the number of the car as 17,164 and the name of the man driving as Ernest Popes. It is said that the car was on the wrong side of the road.

Miss Trainer's right fot was bruised. She was taken into a near by drug store and later conveyed to her home in the auto that ran her down.

GRIEVE AT WATER WALKER'S SUICIDE

There is sorrow among the many Boston friends of C. W. Oldrieve, the water walker, over the news of his suicide at Memphis, Tenn., following closely the death of his wife, to whom he was passionately devoted.

Oldrieve regarded Boston as his home and many of his most famous feats were performed here. With big wooden shoes, he thought nothing of walking from Winthrop to Nahant with wind and tide against him, but his latest and most astonishing effort was the walk along the surface of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers from Cincinnati to New Orleans, which he accomplished in forty days and which [illegible] for him a $5,000 wager. In all his tramps, Oldrieve was accompanied by his wife in a row boat.

TOWN DARK BY THEFT OF WIRE

Theft of half a mile of copper electric light wire not only caused the Highlands district of Newton to be in darkness during the early part of last night, but also caused belief, owing to a similar theft in Watertown, that experienced linesmen are the thieves.

The Newton theft occurred early yesterday morning on the Winchester street part of the system.

FITZ CALLED HOME BY $1,599,550 LOAN

Mayor Fitzgerald is expected back from Old Orchard Beach to-morrow, where he has been recuperating after his recent attack of erysipelas. While it is not thought that his visit at City Hall will be a protracted one, he will undoubtedly remain long enough to affix his signature to the $1,599,550 loan bill passed by the city council, and now reposing on his desk.

An additional loan bill calling for the appropriation of $500,000 for the construction and maintenance of water mains, will be introduced by Alderman Curley at to-morrow's meeting of the board, and as His Honor is very anxious to see this passed, he will probably have a conference with some of the Democratic members of the board and advise them how to pilot it safely through.

Just now it appears as though the loan bill has little chance of getting by to-morrow. None of the Republican aldermen can be found who will put themselves on record as favoring it, and it requires a two thirds vote, or two votes in addition to those of the seven Democratic members, there is little hope of it passing.

Alderman Bell, it is expected, will make a few pert and pertinent remarks concerning Boston's busy Mayor, because the latter last week instructed Superintendent Nolan of the building department to remove the Ward 24 room from Music Hall at Fields Corner to Draper Hall, a short distance away on Adams street. The alderman questions the legality of the Mayor's action without considering the board, but as Mayor Fitzgerald did not take the action without consulting Corporation Counsel Babson, the trouble will probably not amount to more than a ripple on the surface.

A report from the aldermanic Committee on Health will be submitted to the full board to-morrow recommending the granting of the proposed site for the contagious hospital of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Society at Corey road and Summit avenue, Brighton. Chairman Woods, alderman from Brighton, will submit a minority report asking that the board reject the application for a location in Brighton.

Mayor Fitzgerald will go to the Elks' convention at Philadelphia on Tuesday, and during his absence Acting Chairman Berwin of the Board of Aldermen will hold the reins.

BARTLETT'S BOOM A DOUGLAS WEDGE?

Ex-Governor William L. Douglas still refuses to say positively whether or not he would under any circumstances accept the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Stories have been in circulation for some time that General Bartlett is but a stalking horse in the campaign for Mr. Douglas, that Mr. Douglas is paying Bartlett's preliminary expenses for the purpose of arousing opposition to Henry M. Whitney and that at the proper time both Whitney and Bartlett will withdraw and leave the field to Douglas.

Mr. Douglas will not even discuss these stories. He will not talk politics at all, that is, to newspaper men for publication. In order to give him an opportunity to deny or affirm these stories a reporter for the Boston Sunday American called on ex-Governor Douglas at his factory at Brockton yesterday.

"I came from the Boston American, Mr. Douglas," said the reporter, "and would like to talk with you about the political situation in Massachusetts."

"You can't [illegible]," replied Mr. Douglas, "I will not be interviewed."

"But Mr. Douglas, there is a story that—"

"I will not be interviewed," interrupted Mr. Douglas and glancing at his watch he started to walk towards two gentlemen who were waiting for him in the other end of the reception room.

"Will you permit me to ask you a few questions?" pleaded the reporter as the ex-Governor walked away.

Again came the answer: "I will not be interviewed," and it was accompanied by a pat on the reporter's shoulder and a smile.

"I will not be interviewed," repeated Mr. Douglas. "I am very much obliged to you, but I have nothing to say."

As he finished his sentence, Mr. Douglas moved in the direction of the men who were waiting for him and the reporter started for a train for Boston.

BLOW KILLED MRS. STUDLEY, REPORTS MEDICAL REFEREE

Says Opium Found in Stomach Might Have Been Contributing Cause.

WHY STUDLEY CASE PUZZLES POLICE

Here Are the Points Indicating Suicide	Here Are the Points Indicating Murder
Wounds on the head could have been caused by her head striking a moss-covered or well rounded rock. She was despondent because of failure to meet person she expected. Decided to go to the lake on sudden impulse to end her life. Opium found in the stomach indicated she had also tried poison. Jumped into the lake after dark and could not see how shallow the water was.	Death was due to congestion of the brain. No water was found in the lungs. Mrs. Studley was dead when her body reached the lake. She ate a hearty meal after leaving the hotel. Where the meal was obtained cannot be found. She was known to have some money. Only a few cents were found in her pocketbook. She was not despondent while at the hotel.

SALEM, N. H., July 13.—Medical Referee Harry Newell to-night mailed his official report of his autopsy on Mrs. Annie H. Studley's body to County Solicitor Batchelder in Portsmouth. In it he positively declares that, in his opinion, she met death from a blow on the right eye causing concussion of the brain. The report reads as follows:

"Mrs. Annie H. Studley came to her death from one or both of two causes, one an overdose of opium in some form, and the other, concussion of the brain in the form of a blow over the right eye.

"It is my opinion that concussion of the brain was the direct cause of her death and opium the contributing cause."

This is the first formal report that the medical referee has given out, although 10 days ago he officially stated that Mrs. Studley did not die from drowning. A new turn is thus given the Canobie Lake mystery, and it is expected that the Rockingham County officials will start their search on a new track on Monday.

Professor Angell of West Derry, who has been analyzing the contents of the stomach of Mrs. Annie H. Studley, reported to-night to Dr. Henry Newell, medical referee, that he had found there twelve grains of opium.

None of the medical men who viewed the body or were present at the autopsy can reconcile the wounds found on Mrs. Studley's head with the theory of suicide. The conditions under which the body was found suggested to the investigators the theory that Mrs. Studley had been struck one or possibly two cruel blows over the head with a club and her body was tossed into the lake after death. Yet after spending day after day searching for clues to the woman's murderer, the authorities found themselves blocked at every point.

Authorities Are Baffled.

Knowing that Mrs. Studley had partaken of a meal after she left the Rockingham Hotel on Monday morning, a fact revealed by the chemist's analysis, they visited every house for more than a mile about the scene of the tragedy and failed to find where that meal had been obtained.

This is what Sheriff Marcus M. Collis had to say to-day in regard to that fact: "We have run down every clue, and we find ourselves now practically where we began. There is much yet to be explained, but these explanations are not forthcoming. Somebody knows much concerning this woman's visit from Winthrop to that strange region. Somebody knows why the woman left Winthrop. Somebody knows who she was to meet at Canobie lake. But this somebody has not come forward with any information to the authorities. Then there must be somebody around the lake who met and talked with that woman during the day Monday.

"While we have not yet received the complete report of the medical referee, still Professor Angell's report to me shows that two hours before the death of Mrs. Studley, she partook of meat and potatoes. She had coffee, rolls and doughnuts at 9 o'clock Monday morning at the Rockingham Hotel. Where did Mrs. Studley eat her afternoon meal?

Suicide Theory Refuted.

"The suicide theory presumes that Mrs. Studley, intent on suicide, disappointed in not meeting the friend for whom she waited three days at the Rockingham, went to the nearest point in the lake and immediately threw herself in, but this is refuted by the report of Professor Angell that he found meat and potatoes in the stomach of the woman and no trace whatever of the doughnuts and the coffee which she had partaken of at the Rockingham Hotel an hour before she reached the Canobie Lake station.

"Then there are the other many strange things in connection with the case. We find no motive for murder, none whatever, and still we cannot [illegible] ourselves to suicide. We have given the case the most patient and thorough investigation for ten days, and we are now just where we begun. I do not attach much significance to the trace of opium, although it would be important to know just how much opium the stomach of the woman contained. This, however, we cannot learn until Professor Angell finally submits his report.

"The fears of the people of Salem and adjoining towns that the escaped lunatic murderer Vaschi Czenovos has been roaming about that section have been dispelled by the investigation of State Supervisor Hart of Concord. To sum the whole situation up, we are simply waiting for somebody to come forward with something upon which we can work."

It is not believed that Mrs. Studley was killed at the point in the lake where the body was found. It would have been impossible for the body to have remained unseen all day Monday where it was found by Rev. Mr. Candler Tuesday afternoon. Hundreds of boats made a landing place just at that spot, and in the eighteen inches of water the body would have been readily discerned. Tangled in the hair was a mass of eel grass, and the nearest eel grass is one-eighth of a mile away.

PRESSURE ON GUILD IN DOLAN'S BEHALF

Powerful Friends Urge Mayor's Secretary as Successor to Register George.

A determined effort is being made by the friends of Arthur W. Dolan, private secretary to Mayor Fitzgerald, to have Governor Guild send his name to the Council to fill the position made vacant by the appointment of Register of Probate Elijah George to a seat on the Probate bench.

Register George's name goes to the Council on Wednesday for confirmation, and as soon as the appointment is confirmed the name of his successor will be announced. Secretary Dolan is a lawyer of standing and is familiar with the duties of the office. He has friends in the ranks of both the Republicans and Democrats. There are a number of others who gaze with longing eyes on the plum, and one of the most prominently mentioned candidates is Thomas F. Waldron, a well-known newspaper man. The appointment is only for about five months or until the State election.

THE HARRIMAN PERIL.

Here is the Interstate Commerce Commisson's formal characterization of Harriman, the railroad magnate:

HIS CRIMES: Violation of the act of June 20, 1874, in practicing discriminations in the management of the Central Pacific Railroad; fine, $1,000; imprisonment not less than six months.
Conducting a combination in restraint of trade in interstate and foreign commerce.

HIS POLICY: To gather under one head all transcontinental lines and to exclude the incoming of all competitors.

HIS POWER: Well nigh absolute over his entire system.

HIS RAILROAD CONTROL: Seven great systems, every steamship line on the Pacific south of Puget Sound, and two big steamship lines on the Atlantic.

HIS PARTIAL RAILROAD CONTROL: Eleven systems and one express company.
Indefensible financing.
Taking a rake-off of nearly $114,000,000 from a railroad that cost but $58,000,000, and nothing tangible added since to the property.

HIS RECENT VENTURES: Acquiring interests in Eastern railroads within the last year amounting to nearly $132,000,000.

tion of any penalty—that is not within its province—but it has sent the report to the Department of Justice, where the question of punishment will be decided Rules Many Big Lines.

Since the receipt of the report, despite the fact that he is taking his Summer vacation, Attorney-General Bonaparte has announced that he will spend several days each month at his desk, and that he will devote most of that time to a consideration of the commission's Harriman report.

The report reveals the tremendous power of Mr. Harriman. Seven great railroad systems, every steamship line on the Pacific south of Puget Sound, and two big steamship lines on the Atlantic are declared to be owned or controlled by him, while eleven systems and one express company are partially controlled by him.

"His power seems well nigh absolute over his entire system," the report says, and then it goes on to show that his policy has been to gather under one head all transcontinental lines and to eliminate all competition.

"Clarke Pact Illegal.

The penal offence, of which Mr. Harriman is said to have been guilty, is the gobbling of the Central Pacific. The commission says that an act of Congress of June 20, 1874, still effective prohibits its being operated other than free from discrimination, under a penalty of fine and imprisonment.

Mr. Harriman, the commission declares, violated the law when he absorbed the San Pedro, Los Angeles and St. Lake Railroad and entered into an ironclad agreement with Senator Clarke, the Montana copper millionaire, by which they monopolized the trade of California until a few weeks ago, when the agreement was abrogated.

Through financial jugglery in the issuing of bonds the commission charges Mr. Harriman extracted from the Chicago & Alton nearly $114,000,000 from an expenditure of less than $56,000,000.

A dividend of 30 per cent. was paid out of the 65 cents on the dollar realized on common and preferred stock and this was later covered up and an obligation of the railroad for almost $1,000,000 credited as an asset.

The syndicate of Gould, Stillman, Schiff and Harriman realized a profit of $8,000,000 on this deal, Harriman, as chairman, was voted about $104,000 for his services, and when the road was turned over to the Rock Island under the agreement for joint alternate control there was no money to buy necessary equipment or build 34 miles of railroad, for which a mortgage had already been given by Harriman

End Competition

The report in a nutshell finds that Mr. Harriman and his associates have violated the Federal law and the Constitution of nearly every State through which their railroads pass, in acquiring control of parallel lines and eliminating competition.

The commission finds that through the ownership of some $40,000,000 of the stock of the Santa Fe, 17 per cent. of its entire capital stock, with common directors, there has been a division of the fruit traffic between certain California territory and the East. Each road takes a certain percentage of the fruit trade, and the Union Pacific and the Santa Fe have amalgamated their interests in the Northwestern Pacific under joint control.

The report points out that the acquisition of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific has eliminated the Denever & Rio Grande as a transcontinental factor

Harriman's 'Harmony.'

Previous to the acquisition, the Rio Grande had equal facilities over the Central Pacific. Its business has decreased, and its ability to compete with the Union Pacific is impaired. For this reason the Gould lines are aiding the construction of a new line from Ogden to San Francisco.

The Commission cites these as 'conspicuous illustrations of the development of the theory of "community of interest" and harmony and management,' which Mr. Harriman suggested when he demanded representation upon the Santa Fe board of directors.

The lengthy report is written by Commissioner Franklin F. Lane, and the other commissioners unanimously join with him. The proceeding was instituted on November 15, 1906. The taking of testimony began in New York January 4. Other sessions were held in Chicago, Seattle, Portland, Ore., San Francisco and Los Angeles.

April 4 the commission heard counsel in argument at Washington, and they have since been considering the facts brought out at the hearings.

That Charles Sanger Mellen, president of the New Haven system, in his efforts to absorb the Boston & Maine followed the methods of Mr. Harriman are demonstrated by the report.

Mr. Harriman and Mr. Mellen used the same system of financiering, and both tried the experiment of having one board of officers for their own roads and the ones they were going to gobble.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, in its report, declares that it is illegal for competing lines to have any common directors or officers, and it makes this suggestion, which may be formed into a law, before the New Haven & Hartford Boston & Maine merger question comes up in the next Massachusetts Legislature:

"Railroads should not be permitted to invest generally in the stocks, bonds and securities of other railway and steamship companies, except connecting lines, for the purpose of forming through rates of transportation, including branches and feeders."

THE REPORT:

"The investigation so far conducted," the commission says, "has related mainly to certain transactions of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, including the acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific Company, the purchase of large amounts of stock of various railroad companies, and other matters of kindred import."

Under the heading, "The Harriman Policy," the report deals with the reorganization of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and says

"It may fairly be said, therefore, that the policies and purposes of the Union Pacific have been those of Mr. Harriman."

It tells of the territory covered by the Harriman lines.

"Mr. Harriman," the report says, "may journey by steamship from New York to New Orleans, thence by rail to San Francisco, across the Pacific Ocean to China, and, returning by another route to the United States, may go to Ogden by any one of three rail lines, and thence to Kansas City or Omaha, without leaving the deck or platform of a carrier which he controls, and without duplicating any part of his journey.

"That it is only the law which prevents the concentration into Mr. Harriman's hands of every railroad line lying between Canada and Mexico is the frank admission of Mr. Harriman himself made at the hearing."

Increase of Harriman's Power.

At the investigation, after he had been questioned as to his intentions regarding the Santa Fe, Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads, and had admitted that he would gobble them up if the law would permit him to do so, he was asked.

"And your power, which you have [illegible] gradually increase as you took one road after another, so that you might spread not only over the Pacific coast, but out over the Atlantic coast?"

His answer was, "Yes."

"To gather under one head all existing transcontinental lines of [illegible] as possible," the report continues, "and to exclude the incoming of all competitors, became manifestly the Harriman policy, which was inaugurated in 1901 by the issuance of [illegible] of convertible bonds by the Union Pacific.

"In aid of its acquisition of stock control of [illegible] railroads the Union Pacific has [illegible] itself of through the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, which it owns and controls, and which for the purposes of this report will be considered as the Union Pacific. At the present time the Union Pacific owns 1,[illegible] shares out of a total of 2,374,180 shares of the Southern Pacific."

The report tells of the roads and steamships controlled by the Southern Pacific, and says

"By virtue of the consolidation of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific steamship companies all competition between these steamship lines has been destroyed, and there is some evidence on the record tending to show the impossibility of maintaining an independent steamship line running out of any of these ports without the consent of and arrangement with a connecting rail carrier."

Under the heading, "Considerations of National Policy," the report points out possible danger to Philippine and Hawaiian trade. It says

"It is a matter of large significance that our trade relations with the newly acquired territory of Hawaii and our Philippine dependencies, to say nothing whatever of the newly awakened lands on the other side of the Pacific Ocean, must depend to no slight degree upon the competitive relations between rail carriers reaching our Pacific coast ports.

"There is a further consideration of national policy arising out of the history of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific roads which distinguishes a combination of such roads." The report continues. "The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific were born out of national sentiment and need."

Not Relieved of Obligations.

They were to be "for all time available to the business and governmental necessities of our people. For violating this agreement, in consideration of which government lands were donated to the road, either road can be fined $1,000.

"The fact that the Union Pacific and Central Pacific companies were thereafter separately reorganized under the laws of Utah and acquired these lines does not relieve them from the public obligations imposed by the acts of Congress," the report says

It takes several pages of the report to recite the details of the deal by which Mr Harriman and the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railway Company got together and "fixed" rates, and several more are devoted to a statement of the stock held by the Union Pacific (Mr. Harriman) in other railways, and to the Harriman methods of high finance

"The Union Pacific and its connecting and subordinate line, the Oregon Short Line, the report says, have assumed obligations which are now outstanding amounting to approximately $181,000,000, all of which has been used in the purchase of stock in other railroads.

Dealing with the reorganization of the Union Pacific for gobbling purposes, the commission says:

"The total mileage of the company was 1,822.79 miles. This road was reorganized but by such reorganization the total of its securities was not reduced. It issued against these 1,800 miles of road the following bonds and stocks

4 per cent. first mortgage bonds	$[illegible]
Preferred stock	[illegible]
Common stock	[illegible]
Total	$236,000,000

"It gave to the old first mortgage bondholders new bonds to the par value of their old bonds and substantially 50 per cent. in preferred stock. For an assessment on the common stock it gave preferred stock, and for the common stock it gave share for share of the new [illegible] stock, thereby issuing $236,000,000 of securities and stock in lieu of $201,104,362 of stock and obligations outstanding at the time of the reorganization."

The Chicago & Alton Grab.

The report deals at length with Mr. Harriman's grab of the Chicago & Alton railroad in 1903

"The syndicate, composed of Mr. Harriman, Mortimer L. Schiff representing Jacob H. Schiff; George J. Gould and James Stillman, which obtained control of the Chicago & Alton and issued new bonds," the report says, "made [illegible] a profit on these bonds of about $[illegible], which could have been and should have been reaped by the railroad company.

"Seven millions of the $[illegible] authorized have been pledged as security for $5,000,000 borrowed [illegible] company, and the remaining [illegible] million is held in the treasury," the report continues.

"Out of the sixty-five cents on the dollar thus realized by the railroad company the principal stockholders voted themselves a dividend of 30 per cent. on the common and preferred stocks. The total dividend amounted to $6,669,180, and as it appears they owned more than 95 per cent. of the stock they received nearly all of it. This dividend was not reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"In order to find an excuse for borrowing money to pay the dividend, Mr. Harriman who was in control of the financial affairs of the road, caused $12,444,177.66 to be credited in December 1899 to 'construction expenditures uncapitalized.' As a matter of fact, all money which had been previously used for betterments of the property had been annually appropriated by the board of directors and charged against the income of the property, in addition to paying the dividends; so that all the money so appropriated had been once paid out of income and had, during many years, been charged off to operating expenses. All of this $12,444,177.66 apparently had not been expended even under the former management.

Covering Up the Facts.

"Their manner (Mr. Harriman et al.) would have the effect of covering up the payment of the dividend out of the proceeds of the mortgage and the discount on the bonds, so that one reading the annual published report of the company would not see the true state of facts. The commission can not say this was the object, but one expert railroad accountant testified that this would be the effect.

Furthermore, instead of paying all of the coupons outstanding on the prior mortgage bonds and cancelling them, as was contemplated when the $40,000,000 mortgage was made, $978,477 of these coupons were, from 1901 to 1905, carried as an asset in the treasury of the Alton Company, under the head of 'Funded Interest Account,' and on June 30, 1905, credited to assets and charged to capital account of the Chicago & Alton Railway Company.

"The assets and the profit and loss account of the company were swelled by this transaction to the extent of $973,477; thus, in fact, turning a debt or obligation of the company, which should have been paid and cancelled, into an asset, and capitalizing the same.

The report goes on to tell how the syndicate, having acquired the stock of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, organized the Chicago & Alton Railway Company under the laws of Illinois and transferred their stock of the railroad company to an intermediary, one Louis L. Stanton, who had no interest therein.

"Stanton entered into a pretended contract with the new railway company," the report says, "whereby the new company was to buy from him their stock of the old railroad company for the following sums:

Transferred to Intermediary.

For their 84,722 shares of preferred stock, which had cost them $6,944,400, and on which they had received a special dividend of $1,041,600, according to this contract they obtained, in cash, $10,000,000.

"For their 183,224 shares of common stock, transferred to the railway company, which had cost them $32,064,200, and on which they had received a special dividend of $5,496,720, they received 194,890 shares of preferred and 105,428 shares of common stock, a total of 890,318 shares of the new company.

"It does not appear what they sold this stock for, but it does appear that the Union Pacific Railroad Company bought, in 1904, 103,481 shares of the preferred at $86.50 a share.

"It appears that Harriman, Schiff, Gould and Stillman also owned a line of railroad 38 miles long, which there is some evidence to show had cost them very much less than $3,000,000. This railroad was also transferred to the intermediary, Stanton, who sold it to the new company for $3,000,000 cash. So that by this transaction the syndicate were to receive in cash $13,000,000 and all of the stock of the new company in exchange for about 98 per cent. of the stock of the old company and the railroad 38 miles long.

"To raise the $18,000,000 in cash, the shares of the old railroad company were first mortgaged for $22,000,000 and the bonds were nominally sold to Kuhn, Loeb, & Co. for $13,000,000 cash, or a little less than 60 cents on the dollar. As a matter of fact it appears by the testimony of Mr. Harriman that Mr. Stanton never owned any of the stock or the railroad, but was a mere intermediary.

This mortgage made by the Chicago & Alton Railway company, covering the stocks of the railroad company, also covered about 34 miles of prospective railroad which the company contemplated constructing and which it was authorized to construct under its charter and organization. But all the bonds were sold, and no bonds were left to raise money with which to construct the line then contemplated. So that, when the new management took hold of the Alton on the 1st of October, 1906, it found that this line, in process of construction, had already been mortgaged, the bonds sold, and no funds reserved with which to pay for the construction.

Deal Roundly Denounced.

"Figures show," the commission says, "that liabilities of over $113,894,000 were placed upon property which had cost approximately fifty-eight millions, or an increase of stock and liabilities upon the road for which not a dollar of tangible property had been added of practically $56,000,000.

The whole Chicago & Alton deal the report characterizes as "rich in methods of indefensible financing."

RECOMMENDATIONS.

THE recommendations of the commission are along the lines advocated by the opponents of the New York, New Haven & Hartford-Boston & Maine merger in Massachusetts.

They oppose the acquiring of one parallel or competing line by another, express the opinion that railroads should not be allowed to invest in each other's stocks, and that railroad stocks should be a safe and conservative investment for the people.

The recommendations do not suggest that anything be done to Mr. Harriman for grabbing every railroad he needed in his business.

Here are the commission's recommendations in full.

What the Commission Suggests.

(1) The function of a railroad corporation should be confined to the furnishing of transportation. Railroads should not be permitted to invest generally in the stocks, bonds, and securities of other railway and of steamship companies, except connecting lines, for the purpose of forming through routes of transportation, including branches and feeders. It is in the interest of the public to facilitate the consolidation of connecting lines. The credit of a railway company is founded upon the resources and prosperity of the country through which it runs. Its surplus funds and credit should be used for the betterment of its lines and in extensions and branches to develop the country contiguous to it. The testimony taken upon this hearing shows that about 50,000 square miles of territory in the State of Oregon, surrounded by the lines of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, and the Southern Pacific Company, is not developed; while the funds of those companies which could be used for that purpose are being invested in stocks like the New York Central and other lines having only a remote relation to the territory in which the Union Pacific system is located

Railroad securities should be safe and conservative investments for the people. To this end the risks of the railroad should be reduced to a minimum. Everyone knows that railway securities fluctuate more or less, according to the prosperity of the times, and also by reason of the wide speculation in such securities. It therefore adds an element of hazard to a railroad's capital and credit to have its funds invested in the stocks of other companies, thereby endangering its solvency and its ability to pay reasonable dividends upon its own capital stock. It is a serious menace to the financial condition of the country to have large railway systems fail to meet their obligations or go into the hands of receivers, and the object of legislation and administration should be to lessen the risks of railway investments.

Against Public Policy.

(2) It is contrary to public policy, as well as unlawful, for railways to acquire control of parallel and competing lines. This policy is expressed in the Federal laws and in the constitutions and laws of nearly every State in the Union. We have examined the constitutions and laws of all the States, and find in about forty of them prohibitions against consolidation of capital stock or franchises of competing lines. Competition between railways as well as between other industries is the established policy of the nation. And while the acquisition of a small minority of the stock of a competing line might not decrease the competition, yet the acquisition of any considerable amount of stock, with representation on the board of directors of such railway unquestionably has the effect of diminishing competition and lessening to that extent its effectiveness. So long as it is the policy of the General Government and of the States to maintain competition between naturally competing lines, the ownership of any stock by one railway in a competing railway should not be permitted, and such lines of railway should be prohibited from having any common directors or officers

(3) The time has come when some reasonable regulation should be imposed upon the issuance of securities by railways engaged in interstate commerce. We are aware that in the construction of new lines of railway, developing new territory, it has been necessary in many instances to sell railway securities at large discount, and to sell bonds with stock bonuses, and even in such cases it has many times been difficult to raise the necessary capital. Men will not invest their money and take the risk for small rates of interest.

But this principle does not apply to old established railway systems having good credit. Such railways should be prevented from inflating their securities for merely speculative purposes. Railroads should be encouraged to extend their systems and develop the country. It is of the utmost importance, also, that railway securities should be safe and conservative investments for the public, and should yield good and ample return for the money invested. Reasonable regulation will tend to make them safer and more secure investments, and thereby benefit not only the railway companies but the public.

CONCLUSIONS.

IN its report the commission devotes considerable space to "conclusions."

The principal conclusion is that Mr. Harriman's idea in getting control of the Southern Pacific was to eliminate competition.

The conclusions in full are:

The effect of the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific has been to unify and amalgamate the management of these two railway companies and their steamship lines, and to eliminate competition between them in transcontinental business and in business to and from Oriental ports.

The Union Pacific, as has been shown, controls the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, the stock of which is deposited in the hands of a trustee. This line was originally intended as an independent road, extending from Salt Lake, where it connects with the Union Pacific and with the Denver & Rio Grande, to Los Angeles and San Pedro, Cal. There is therefore no competition between this line and the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific

LEGISLATION URGED IN INTERSTATE FINDINGS

Function of Railroad Corporation Should Be Confined to Furnishing Transportation.

Joint Control Inaugurated.

It appears that the Union Pacific also owns $10,000,000, par value, of the stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and about $30,000,000 more is owned by individuals connected with the Union Pacific, making $40,000,000, or substantially 17 per cent of the entire capital stock of the Santa Fe Company. Who owns this stock, outside of the $1,000,000, Mr. Harriman declined to state. Two directors of the Union Pacific are also directors of the Santa Fe Company, and there is now a division of the oriental traffic by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company between the Union Pacific and the Santa Fe systems. It appears that there has also been a division of the fruit traffic between certain California territory and the East, each taking a certain percentage, and that north of San Francisco the Union Pacific and the Santa Fe have joined and amalgamated their interest in the Northwestern Pacific Railroad, and that a joint control has been inaugurated similar to that of the Alton.

Eliminated Competition.

Prior to the acquisition of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific, the Denver & Rio Grande system, extending from Denver, where it connects with various lines to the east, to Salt Lake and Ogden, was given equal facilities over the Central Pacific, and thereby practically formed another transcontinental line. Since the amalgamation of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, and the construction of the San Pedro road, this line has been denied equal facilities in the receipt and transportation of freight over the Central Pacific and San Pedro lines. Its business therefore, has decreased, and its ability to compete with the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific impaired. On this account the Gould lines are aiding the construction of another line from Ogden to San Francisco.

The joint control of the Alton Railway by the Union Pacific and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company has undoubtedly eliminated competition between the Alton and the Rock Island between Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City

These are conspicuous illustrations of the development of the theory of "community of interest" and "harmony of management," which Mr. Harriman suggested when he demanded representation upon the Santa Fe board.

If the policy of purchasing and controlling stocks in competing lines is permitted to continue, it must mean suppression of competition.

FISH SEEKS DENEEN'S AID IN RENEWING THE WAR ON E. H. HARRIMAN

Chicago, July 13.—The Harriman-Fish fight for control of the Illinois Central Railroad is about to be renewed. This is made evident by the action of Mr. Fish, who was deposed from the presidency at the behest of Mr. Harriman last November, in asking Governor Deneen of Illinois to attend a meeting of the directors of the road in New York next Wednesday, on the ground that his vote, as an ex-officio member of the board, will be valuable to the faction of the directorate which opposes Mr. Harriman

Mr. Fish was ousted from the presidency, and J. T. Harahan, then vice-president of the road, was elected in his place. November 7, 1906, all the directors being present except Vice-President Welling. After the meeting Governor Deneen said that Mr. Harahan was elected by a vote of 8 to 0, Messrs. Fish, C. M. Beach, J. W. D. Cutting and the Governor, who formed the so-called "Fish faction," having refrained from voting. Mr. Harriman claimed a complete victory after the meeting, but Mr. Fish evidently did not accept that view

SOBS DENIAL THAT SHE KILLED RIVAL

New York, July 13.—Sobbing denials with almost every breath, Mrs. Elisabeth McDonald was locked in the Tombs tonight to give the coroner time to decide whether a beating she gave her neighbor, Mrs. Laura Stone, was responsible for the latter's death early to-day.

"Oh, I didn't kill her," she moaned. "I was jealous and pushed her. I pulled her veil, but I didn't kill her"

The prisoner's husband, George McDonald, sheet writer for a book-maker, has not been found, either by the police, who want to learn what he knows of the dispute between his wife and Mrs. Stone, or by the woman's friends, who think he may be able to find sureties on the $2,500 bond under which his wife is held.

Mrs. Stone, wife of Record Clerk George Stone of the police department, complained to the police yesterday that Mrs. McDonald had beaten her. To-day Stone found his wife dead in bed at his side.

Detectives who visited the McDonald flat received no response to their knocks and entered by way of a fire escape and through a window to find the woman cowering in fright, her face made even more pitiful by a pair of badly discolored eyes.

Almost crazed by terror when she learned Mrs. Stone was dead, she weepingly told her story to Coroner Dooley and Assistant District Attorney Manley

Her husband, she said, had taken Mrs. Stone to dinner and returned so late that her jealousy was aroused. When she reproached him she says he beat her, blackened both her eyes, left home and has not returned. Then she met Mrs. Stone on the street and upbraided her.

"We had words," she said, "and a struggle. Mrs. Stone slipped and fell. I left her and went to my flat."

An autopsy shows that Mrs. Stone died of cerebral hemorrhage, which the doctors say may have been caused by a blow, a fall or merely by physical, or mental overexertion

ENTERPRISE BOYS TELL OF BAD FOOD

Hearing of testimony regarding the condition of affairs on the training ship Enterprise will be continued by the board of inquiry to-morrow and an early report is expected by Governor Guild

Several cadets who had not testified Friday told their stories yesterday. The quality of some of the food furnished to the cadets and which resulted in a strike in which most of them joined was the subject of most of the testimony

Commander Low, against whose administration many of the cadets had complained, was present at the inquiry yesterday. With him were Ensign Harry R. Brayton, U. S. N., the executive officer; A. Russell Cushing, the navigator; Edward J. Scanlon, the chief engineer; Harry W. Maynard, the watch officers; Dr. E. L. Saunders, the surgeon, and N. J. Weiner, the pay clerk and commissary

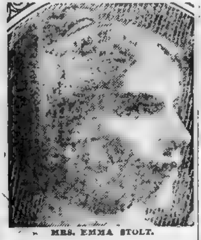
One-half of the cadets who had remained by the ship and who were granted shore leave Friday evening, reported back to the ship at seven o'clock last night.

The other half were then given shore leave and were told to be back to-morrow.

Some of those cadets who left the ship at New London and who signed a round robin protesting against the bread and other articles of food furnished on shipboard, declared last night that their side of the question had been espoused by some of the cadets who had stuck to the ship, but who came ashore Friday and yesterday.

Mrs. Emma Stolt, of Appleton, Wisconsin.

"A neighbor advised me to use Peruna. I began to improve at once."



MRS. EMMA STOLT.

Mrs. Emma Stolt 1069 Oneida St., Appleton, Wis., writes

"Peruna has done me a great deal of good since I began taking it and I am always glad to speak a good word for it.

"Three years ago I was in a wretched condition with backaches, bearing down pains, and at times was so sore and lame that I could not move about. I had inflammation and irritation, and although I used different remedies they did me no good

"A neighbor who had been using Peruna advised me to try it and I am glad that I did. I began to improve as soon as I took it and I felt much better

"I thank you for your fine remedy. It is certainly a godsend to sick women."

Catarrh of the Internal Organs.

Miss Theresa Bertles, White Church, Mo., writes

"I suffered with catarrh of the stomach, bowels and internal organs. Everything I ate seemed to hurt me. I never had a passage of the bowels without taking medicine. I was so tired mornings, and ached all over. I had a pain in my left side, and the least exertion or excitement made me short of breath.

"Now, after taking Peruna for six months, I am as well as I ever was. Peruna has worked wonders for me. I believe Peruna is the best medicine in the world, and I recommend it to my friends."

ENGLISH STOP THE BOER WAR HISTORY

London, July 13.—England is not to know the real truth about the Boer War. To save the reputations of certain well known generals and officers, the War Office has had Colonel Henderson's unfinished "History of the Boer War" destroyed. It was written as the official history by the greatest English writer on military subjects since Napier, but he died before completing his monumental work.

After Colonel Henderson's death the War Office examined his work and found that it was much too outspoken about the blunders and graft that distinguished the campaign. They have, therefore, ordered the compilation of an entirely new history by a staff of officers under the direction of General Sir Frederick Maurice, who is perhaps the only military writer who could adequately fill Colonel Henderson's place.

But the new official history will deal gently with the reputations of the distinguished muddlers.

FORMOSANS SLAY 3,000 JAPANESE

Overmatch Troops of Mikado in Two Years' Warfare in Island.

RE-INFORCEMENTS ON WAY

Savage Tribes Fight Desperately to Retain Rich Forest and Mineral Areas.

Tokio, July 13.—Confronted by a list of more than 1,000 deaths in the past six months' fighting in Eastern Formosa, and a total list of 3,000 killed in two years, and alarmed by popular clamor for some progress in the campaign, the Japanese government is hurrying strong reinforcements to the army already in the field.

A rigid censorship has hidden from the world the magnitude of the struggle the Mikado is waging against the Eastern Formosans for possession of the island's rich forests and mineral areas. Though the conflict has been raging since the close of the war with Russia, the Japanese admit that they cannot call themselves masters of more than one-third of the 7,500 square miles they are striving to conquer.

Fight Fifty Battles in Year.

Nearly fifty battles were fought last year. With the leaking of news of actual conditions, and the outcry for a successful termination of the war, the expeditionary forces have redoubled their efforts, and skirmishing is almost uninterrupted.

In a recent attack upon the native stronghold of Ciutozan 150 of the Japanese storming party of 500 fell. The total number of killed since hostilities began is estimated at three thousand, exact figures being impossible to obtain, owing to the government's secrecy concerning the country's losses in men and money.

When, by the terms of the treaty which closed the Chinese-Japanese war, the entire island of Formosa was ceded to Japan the country west of the mountain chain which divides the island north and south was settled and peaceful.

Natives Desperate Fighters.

The eastern half remained in the hands of the savage aborigines—a type similar to the Malays. The men are desperate fighters, and, despite Japanese skill, have inflicted enormous losses on the latter by means of the guerilla tactics and perfect knowledge of the difficult mountain country.

The Japanese forces in the eastern part of the island number about 10,000 men, and the re-inforcements will increase this to a total of nearly 15,000.

SAVES 11 FISHERMEN AS VESSEL IS SUNK

Comrade in Dory Warns Crew When Liner Cuts Down Boston Schooner.

New York, July 13.—Eleven fishermen, comprising the crew of the schooner Shepherd King, of Boston, owe their lives to the fact that one of their companions, engaged in a fight with a huge swordfish while out in a small dory, was able to give them warning of the impending disaster when their vessel was run down by the Russian steamer Saratow. The men were landed here to-night. The Shepherd King went down almost instantly after being hit.

THREE KILLED IN POWDER MILL FIRE

Spark From Car Striking Steel Bar Causes Explosion That Destroys Big Plant.

Columbus, Kas., July 13.—A runaway car, striking against a steel bar, creating sparks, caused an explosion of the Laflin-Rand Powder Company's plant here to-day, which resulted in the death of three employes, John Tracy, Howard Hitchcock and Albert Fish.

The explosion was a dull one, because the powder, three tons in all, was in an unfinished condition. Fire followed the explosion, consuming the mill and entailing an estimated loss of $30,000.

KAISER PREPARING STATE FOR PRINCE EITEL TO RULE

Kaiser's second son as Grand Master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

PRINCE EITEL FRIEDRICH

Alsace-Lorraine Want Second Son of Emperor as Their Own Sovereign.

Berlin, July 13.—In court circles it is believed that the Kaiser, who has just, amid much pomp and state, installed his second son, Prince Eitel Friedrich, as Grand Master for the region of Brandenburg, of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, intends that Prince Eitel shall soon be a reigning Grand Duke as sovereign ruler of Alsace Lorraine.

That province, which was French territory until 1870, and is now governed by a Viceroy, has asked that it be made a sovereign German state and the people of the province have expressed a desire to have as their rulers Prince Eitel and his bride, who was the Duchess Sophie Charlotte of Oldenburg.

Prince Eitel and his Princess became popular all over the German Empire when they requested that all money that would be spent by municipalities in honor of their wedding be given to the poor. Because of that request charitable institutions had spent on them about $25,000,000. Berlin honored the wishes of the royal couple by founding a new home for orphans.

Prince Eitel is a tall and exceedingly good looking young fellow, being over six feet tall, and recalling in stature, in the cut of his features and in his manner, the old Emperor William and the other Anaks of the House of Hohenzollern.

CRITIC TO REVIEW KAISER'S ART WORK

Berlin, July 13.—The Kaiser's interest in art is the subject of a sumptuous work about to be published, edited by the well known art critic, Professor Roese. The book deals with all that the Emperor has done in the cause of art, and the illustrations will include forty-six reproductions of the Kaiser's original sketches.

The Emperor's versatility is shown in the wide range of subjects treated in the volume. A[illegible] painting and scenic art have all come under the Kaiser's critical eye. The book tells the part his Majesty has taken in the building of the Berlin Cathedral and other churches, in the planning of museums, in the decoration of streets and squares with statues and monuments, in scene-painting for the royal theatres, in landscape gardening, etc.

The views of the Kaiser on various art subjects are given in extracts from his public speeches and his conversations with professional artists; also in his marginal notes in books and newspapers.

The Kaiser's own sketches are all unfinished, and are of many subjects, some giving his ideas for monuments, theatrical scenery, etc. The editor of the book gives the Kaiser credit for an extraordinary knowledge of the technique of art, and remarkable skill in drawing.

TERRY'S MONEY GOES TO CHILDREN

London, July 13.—All Miss Ellen Terry's relations have now made the acquaintance of her young husband, James Carew, with whom they are delighted.

Mr. and Mrs. Carew are living in an old world cottage at Winchelsea, which has been tenanted by Mrs. Carew for several years past. The couple are extremely happy and Mr. Carew now confesses that he had been in love with Miss Terry for a year.

It is not generally known, but it is a fact, that Mr. Carew before his marriage absolutely insisted that Miss Terry's money should be settled entirely on her children, Gordon and Edith Craig.

Miss Terry's sister, Mrs. Lewis, with her daughters, motored down to Winchelsea a few days ago and they found Miss Terry, whom they adore, skipping about the garden like a girl of eighteen.

CURZON ORPHANS IN A COUNTRY HOME

London, July 13.—Lord Curzon has found a beautiful permanent home in England where he can bring up his three motherless little girls. They have just taken up their quarters at Hackwood Park, Hampshire, which Lord Curzon has bought from Lord Bolton. Mrs. L. Z. Leiter joined them this week.

Hackwood is a lovely, old-world place, famous for its exquisite gardens. It was formerly the residence of the Dukes of Bolton, and a feature of the French garden is a pavilion with a parquetrie floor, which Lavinia Fenton, the eighteenth century actress who became Duchess of Bolton, used as a music room.

Lord Curzon has had extensive alterations carried out, but the work has been done with so much taste that it has made the old place more beautiful instead of spoiling it.

ASK ALPHONSO TO PARDON ASSASSINS

Madrid, July 13.—Senor Alvarez, a Republican deputy, has sent to King Alfonso a petition, signed by numerous representatives of all the political parties, including former Premier Armijo, General Lopez Domingues and Senor Moret, asking the pardon of Nakens, Ferrer and the others who were recently sentenced to terms of imprisonment for complicity with Morral's attempt to assassinate King Alfonso and Queen Victoria with a bomb on their wedding day.

BOSTON PICKPOCKET GIVEN NINE YEARS

New York, July 13.—William Ferguson, alias Big Bill, aged fifty-three, is a well known pickpocket. He was in court to-day to receive sentence, having been convicted of removing from the pocket of Jacob Klein the sum of $30 on a Manhattan car on June 14. "You belong to the real type of undesirable citizens," said the judge. "In Boston you got three years for picking pockets. The sentence of this court is that you be confined in Sing Sing for a period of nine years."

CZAR FEARS REVOLT WILL SWEEP EMPIRE

Russian Peasants' Uprising Is Growing More Serious Every Minute.

DOUBLE EMPEROR'S GUARD

St. Petersburg, July 13.—Agrarian revolts, more serious than any which have yet occurred, have broken out [illegible] throughout Russia. Troops [illegible] move in all the provinces [illegible] have burned estates, dest[illegible] forced rich land owners [illegible] lives. In encounters between [illegible] tionary peasants and the troops the latter have suffered severely.

The province of Kherson, bordering on the Black Sea, is in a state of revolt. Odessa, the chief city of the province, is filled with troops. There are Russian [illegible] ships in the harbor of Odessa [illegible] crews of those vessels [illegible] upon in case of a general uprising. Many of them have taken part in previous [illegible] tinies and would, it is feared, join the revolutionists.

The whole countryside is practically under military rule, but the presence of soldiers has had little effect in checking the uprising.

There is grave fear in St. Petersburg that the present demonstration is but preliminary to a revolution which [illegible] empire. The revolutionary leaders have been planning their final coup [illegible] are. One of their plans has been to encourage uprisings in the rural districts in order to divert as many troops as possible from the great centres of population.

Moscow, Odessa, St. Petersburg and the other principal cities of Russia will be the scene of the final uprising. The military authorities believe that this is [illegible] and have taken every precaution to [illegible].

There is disaffection among the troops, however, the propaganda of revolt having been spread extensively throughout the army. The Czar regards the situation with great apprehension.

The military heads have been summoned to Peterhof to take counsel. The guards around the Czar have been doubled and every precaution is being taken to prevent an attempt on his life. Such an attempt, even if it were unsuccessful, would, it is feared, precipitate a crisis.

YANKEE WOMEN'S WAR STIRS PARIS

American Duchess Sues American Countess Over House Rent and Jewels.

Paris, July 13.—All social Paris is talking of the legal battle between the American Countess Spottiswood-Mackin and the American Duchess de la Rochefoucauld over house rent and jewels and an incidental but stinging suit for libel.

The involved litigation in which the Countess Spottiswood-Mackin, who was Miss Sally Britton of St. Louis, and the Duchess de la Rochefoucauld, daughter of the late Senator Mitchell of Oregon, are concerned has been heard in court and the decision will be made July 26.

The case originated in a dispute in 1902 over the countess's claim to the recovery of the rent of a house leased to the duchess, which the latter left on the ground that it was inadequately heated. During the controversy the duchess's jewels were attached in a libel suit brought against her by the countess.

The duchess now seeks, first, the repayment of $800, the expense of living at a hotel while the heating of the house was in disorder, and, second, $2,000 damages to her reputation, caused by the countess in entering a criminal complaint because the duchess removed her jewels when attachment proceedings were instituted in connection with the rent suit.

The Duchess de la Rochefoucauld, who was [illegible]ttle Elisabeth Mitchell, daughter of [illegible]tor Mitchell of Oregon, and who married the Duc de la Rochefoucauld in 1892, has held a prominent place in Parisian society, and especially in the American colony.

She is petite, a brilliant conversationalist and beautiful, her nickname is "the pocket edition Venus." Owing to opposition in the duke's family, the marriage was the sensation of the hour in Paris. The bride was given away by Whitelaw Reid, then minister to France. The duchess has one child, a son, born in 1905.

KING ALFONSO RECEIVES PREMIER IN SHIRTSLEEVES

Spain's Democratic Ruler Leads Simple Life.

IN COUNTRY

Madrid, July 13.—The most [illegible] monarch in [illegible] Europe [illegible] King Alfonso [illegible] likes to pass time with his people, and he is always accessible—that is, as accessible as a King can be. At the country place of the royal family at La Granja the King is enjoying every kind of field sport. Of course there is royal etiquette and all that sort of thing at La Granja, but the King may frequently be seen roaming about the fields, riding over the roads unaccompanied or standing by the hedges talking with the peasants.

The other day when Senor Maura called on the King at the royal country home he was received by His Majesty in his shirt sleeves.

"When I am in the country I like to be as one of the people and to enjoy myself as they do," King Alfonso said to one of his friends.

FAKE SPIRITS RULE CZAR, SAYS BERLIN NEWSPAPER

Autocrat Is Reported to Be in the Grasp of Astrologers and Sorcerers.

Berlin, July 13.—Fake spirits absolutely rule Russia to-day. Spiritualistic fakirs, preying on the Czar's superstitious belief in spiritualism and mysticism, dominate the monarch completely. These fakirs, in turn controlled by a court camarilla, through alleged communication with the spirits of Nicholas's ancestors guide the Emperor's wavering policy.

This is the gist of revelations made to-day by the Tageblatt in a long article describing the hopeless conditions existing in the Czar's domain.

Baron Fredericks, the court minister, Count Beckendorff, court marshal, Prince Orloff and Prince Poutiatin are numbered as the leading members of this camarilla. So thoroughly have they brought the Czar under their domination through their spiritualistic chicanery that even Premier Stolypin retains royal favor only by playing into the hands of the cabal.

The Grand Duke Peter Nicholaievitch, an inveterate seeker of power, encourages the Czar's belief in the spiritualistic guidance the latter imagines himself to receive. Every day the emperor goes to Peter's Summer home at Znamenskoye, where he consults the sorcerers and astrologers furnished by the court clique.

ENGLISH DONKEYS AMUSE VANDERBILT

London, July 13.—Alfred Vanderbilt has told his friends that even if the Horse Show had been a failure the parade and judging of the costermongers' donkeys would have repaid him splendidly for crossing the Atlantic.

Mr. Vanderbilt was hardly seen to smile during the show, but when it came to judging the donkeys, and when he was confronted with the genuine British costermonger in all his war paint and flowery vocabulary, he laughed until he ached all over.

"I have never laughed so heartily since I went to my first circus as a boy," said Mr. Vanderbilt.

When one of the costermongers, covered with "pearlies," and with his barrow draped in a tiger skin, drove his donkey toward Mr. Vanderbilt, the latter instinctively put his handkerchief to his nose.

"What d'yer think of my little lot, gu'vner?" whispered the coster hoarsely.

"That tiger skin smells rather strong," said Mr. Vanderbilt.

"Lor' luv yer, gu'vnor," replied the coster. "'Taint the skin that smells. This 'ere is a cat's meat barrow."

$250,000,000 DEBT AGAINST ENGLAND

Rome, July 13.—The biggest claim for debt ever made is that which is to be brought against the British Government by the Marquis Vincenzo Perruzzi, who claims the staggering amount of $[illegible]0,000,000 due to him as the representative of the Peruzzi family, Italian financiers of the Middle Ages.

The Marquis is going to London to be married to an English girl, Miss Betty Cox, and at the same time to make researches to substantiate his gigantic claim. The total has been reached by accumulating interest on $12,000,000 for 560 years.

In the fourteenth century the Peruzzis were the Rochschilds of Europe, and financed kings and princes for their wars. The English Kings, Edward I., II., and III., drew largely from their money bags to provide for their constant wars with France and Scotland. In 1339 the financial condition of England was so bad that Edward III. issued a royal proclamation suspending the repayment of all State loans. This ruined the Peruzzi bank, the head of the firm dying in London brokenhearted, after an ineffectual attempt to secure a settlement.

Since then the Peruzzi family has at intervals reminded the British Government of this ancient debt, and this circumstance, the present claimant believes, may interfere with his claim being disallowed under the Statute of Limitations. He himself has written to King Edward VII. on the subject.

FRENCH PRESIDENT LOVES PARTRIDGE

With Wild Duck It Constitutes Two Most Delicious Dishes of Fallieres.

IS VERY FOND OF GARLIC

Paris, July 13.—With the entry of M. Fallieres into the presidency of France has come the triumph of the cookery of Gascony. But the guests of the President of the republic will not lose by it, for there is no better cuisine. The country of d'Artagnan has all that is required for making a "cordon bleu" famous. No butter, not even the famous product of Isigny itself, can excel that which comes from Agen or Nerac. Of course there is the much discussed question of garlic.

No Gascon cook regards a roast of mutton as perfect unless he has pushed a garlic clove into the meat to give it an aroma of the vegetable dear to southern Frenchmen. However, the taste for garlic is not universal, and therefore it is only used when the President is dining "en famille." But when the President dines or lunches alone, or even with intimate friends whose taste resembles his own, the favorite dishes of sunny Gascony appear on the table.

Fond of Partridges.

The President is "a mighty hunter," and is particularly fond of game of all kinds. For example, here is the manner in which partridges are cooked for the presidential table.

Take four partridges and stuff them with truffles. Place them in a stew pot with a joint of pork and let them come to a boil. The bacon should be removed before serving.

Another of the President's favorite dishes is "salmis of wild duck." When a duck is well roasted it is cut up, the skin taken off, and the pieces placed in a stewpan. In another stewpan are placed a number of onions and "choux de girofle," four shallots, a half bottle of red Bordeaux wine with the bones and other remains of the duck. This is cooked gently, and then a wineglass of port added. The dish is allowed to simmer for twenty minutes, is then skimmed and poured into a sieve. Then it simmers for ten minutes more, after which one-quarter of the sauce is poured over the duck in the other stewpot. This is heated, taking care not to let it boil. The dish is served hot with the remainder of the sauce garnished with little rounds of toasted bread.

Kitchen Economy.

With a view to running the kitchen as economically as possible, the President has established a somewhat novel system. The cook is given a fixed sum for each individual and must provide everything necessary. There is a double tariff. One for the every day meals, when the President dines "en famille," and the other when there are royal or other distinguished guests present.

But there is one thing that is still excellent at the Elysee and that is the wine. M. Fallieres, like all men from the South of France, is a connaisseur of the juice of the grape. He himself owns immense vineyards to which he adds year by year. He is, therefore, one of the most important private winegrowers in France, and none of his guests, not even if they should be monarchs, possess a better cellar. The business would have to be very pressing indeed, that would prevent the President from going to the South among his vineyards to see the vintage begun and taste the young wine.

TO BLAST 500,000 TONS OF MARBLE

Berlin, July 13.—The Gazette of Frankfort published to-day a telegram from Carrara, Italy, stating that on July 14 Gabriele d'Annunzio will fire by electricity the great dynamite blast in the caves of Carrara. The mine contains 17,700 pounds of explosives. It is expected that 500,000 tons of marble will be moved.

B.& M. IN FIRM GRIP OF NEW HAVEN ROAD

120,000 Shares Now In Possession of System In Its Merger Plans.

DIRECTORS VISIT BOSTON

Stock Will Not Be Voted Until Massachusetts Legislature Finally Acts.

It became positively known last night that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has now in its possession 120,000 shares of Boston & Maine stock, which gives it control of that system.

New York, New Haven & Hartford officials claim that these shares, for which New York, New Haven & Hartford stock to the amount of $12,000,000 has been exchanged, were obtained before the passage by the Massachusetts Legislature of its anti-merger legislation.

Talks with railroad officials indicate their conviction that the Massachusetts anti-merger law is unconstitutional on several grounds, notably its interference with the rights of the Boston & Maine shareholders in other States than Massachusetts, and also its bearings upon actual or possible legislation in New Hampshire, where the Boston & Maine is incorporated as well as in the former State.

The officers of the New Haven corporation, however, have definitely decided to submit at all points to the anti-merger law, leaving the matter to be adjusted at the next session of the Massachusetts Legislature. The 120,000 shares of the Boston & Maine will not be voted on should an occasion for the exercise of the voting power arise, until the Legislature of Massachusetts finally acts.

Road Officials In Boston.

President Charles S. Mellen and fourteen directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford came to Boston yesterday, accompanied by Vice-President Timothy E. Byrnes, who went to New York to meet them, on their annual inspection of the road. They came from New York to Providence on the steamer City of Providence of the company's lines and Friday night on the steamer had their monthly business meeting, at which only routine business was transacted.

At Providence they looked over the improvements being made and at Readville inspected the new car shops, the locomotives and the rolling stock.

In South Boston they inspected the yards and land on which important improvements are contemplated.

Luncheon was taken in the South terminal restaurant after a brief business meeting in the executive offices.

Mellen Meets New Bedford Men.

With the exception of President Mellen all left for New York at 1 o'clock on the Knickerbocker Limited of the South Shore Express over the Providence division. Mr. Mellen remained at his office until 2 o'clock in order that he might receive William W. Crapo and J. F. Knowles, representing citizens of New Bedford who are interested in the proposed development of a system of spur tracks for the benefit of the big factories in that city.

MINISTER 97 YEARS OLD CELEBRATING

Rev. Thomas M. Preble Has Been Preaching the Gospel for Over 72 Years.

"For seventy-two years I have been searching after the truth," said the Rev. Thomas Motherwell Preble of No. 11 Winter street, Somerville, who will celebrate his ninety-seventh birthday to-day if the weather permits, by attending the Second Advent Church on Putnam street, where an old-fashioned song and testimony meeting has been specially arranged in his honor. He will have his first automobile ride to-day, when he will be taken to the church in Walter Glidden's machine.

Rev. Mr. Preble is tall and remarkably straight for a man of his age. At the age of fifty he started to learn Greek. His memory is remarkable for its activeness and freshness. He said that he could clearly picture in his mind events that had happened ninety years ago.

He has always been strictly temperate. For seventy-two years he has been actively engaged in the ministry and for forty-five years has carefully studied one book, "The Bible." He has published many books on Biblical subjects. "The Devil to be Destroyed" is one of the most noted. In 1841 he met William Miller, the great Adventist and was converted from a Baptist to an Adventist.

He was one of eleven children, all the rest of whom are dead. His folks were hard working people and he was forced to look out for himself. He said that he thought this made him tough and last so long.

Rev. Mr. Preble was born in Anson, Somerset county, Maine, July 14, 1810. He was ordained to preach in South Parsonfield, Me., and was stationed in various parts of Maine, Troy and Albany, N. Y., Dover and Concord, N. H., Lynn, Hyde Park, Boston and Somerville. He has traveled over New England, Canada and the Middle West as an evangelist.

"I'M NOT CANDIDATE YET," SAYS THAYER

Worcester Man Hedges When Asked if He Will Run for Governor.

Ex-Congressman John R. Thayer, when interviewed in Worcester last night, declined to say positively that he would not be a Democratic candidate for Governor this Fall. He said he was not a candidate now. But, when asked to speak with finality, he hedged. The interview was as follows:

"Are you a candidate for Governor?"

"No, sir, I am not."

"Would you, under any circumstances, be a candidate for Governor?"

"I refuse to answer that question."

"If your friends urged a candidacy upon you, would you see your way clear to accept it?"

"That I also refuse to answer."

Then Mr. Thayer added:

"Do not misunderstand me. I have no desire to be discourteous. You can see the situation. It's like taking an examination and asking a man whether he would pass it or not without knowing the situation.

"I don't want to be discourteous, but it is this way: Very few men in Massachusetts would refuse to accept the candidacy of their party for such a high office if tendered to them. Conditions may arise where it would be for the best interests that I should assume the head of the Democracy and lead the party to victory in this State if possible. Such conditions have not yet arisen, however, and I do not know as they ever will arise."

Kills Man in Ambush in Row Over Cat, Faces Death Chair

GRAVE WILL HIDE REED'S LIFE SECRET

Victim of Watertown Tragedy Was Left as Baby at Foster Parents' Door.

Charles J. Reed, one of the most popular young men in Watertown, who was instantly killed Friday evening, while standing in the yard of his home on Orchard street, by a shot fired from ambush, will be buried from the little home to-morrow morning.

Guiseppe Zeccolo, the Italian neighbor of the Reeds, who admits the shooting, is in the Cambridge jail, charged with murder. He claims that the deed was done in self defence, but the police believe that the shooting was done from behind a window screen in Zeccolo's house and about thirty feet from the victim. Back of this murder is a quarrel about a cat.

Confessed assassin of Watertown young man; the cat which caused the crime, and the victim's foster sister

Excitement runs high in Watertown, where the growing colony of Italians has not met the approval of everybody, and the shot that killed "Charlie" Reed served to kindle a feeling of resentment not only against Zeccolo but also against his friends and fellow-countrymen, a feeling that found voice often yesterday.

"Charles J. Reed, aged 20," the coffin plate reads—but with the young man will be buried a secret. Twenty years ago, when he was but an infant, he was left on a doorstep in Watertown with nothing to identify him and only his dimpled sweet little face and his helplessness to win him friends.

John Reed was a fairly prosperous man in those days, and both he and his wife pined for a child. They had offered to take one of the numerous offspring of a neighbor, had met with refusal, and they were heartbroken. Then came the tiny little fellow into town, and the Reeds took him to their home and their hearts, and reared him to manhood.

Slain by Shot from Ambush.

Ten months ago Mrs. Reed died, and none mourned her more than the stalwart young man who called her mother.

Charlie, as everyone in Watertown called him, had begun to repay in part some of the great debt he owed the Reeds. He had been well educated, he was a fine musician, he was popular and handsome. Often people told him teasingly that he would soon marry, but he would shake his head and declare that his mother and father were growing old and it was his turn to work. And when the mother died it was "Charlie" who helped to console the broken-hearted old man, he and his foster sister Helen, who, too, had been adopted by the warm-hearted old folks.

Old Mr. Reed lost his position on the poor farm and retired to the little home and the patch of ground with its coops of chickens to spend his last days, and though he never fully recovered from the loss of his wife, he took pride in the manliness of his son and the sweetness of his daughter.

And John Reed, in spite of his age and his poverty, was as happy as he could be without his devoted life companion.

Prisoner Confesses Crime.

A shot from ambush ended all his dreams. An assassin's bullet killed the young man, and in the jail at Cambridge a man talks of "self defence," while his lawyer intimates that insanity may at least mitigate the crime of murder—for the man has confessed.

So far the police have three witnesses to corroborate Guiseppe Zeccolo's admission that it was he who killed Charles J. Reed on Friday evening, and they are safely locked up in Cambridge, for, as Chief of Police Cooney of Watertown remarked yesterday, "You never can tell when a man will change his mind and his story."

There is one of the witnesses, however, who is not likely to change his story, for he, Michael Angelo of Waverly, was saved from conviction for the murder only by the fortunate capture and confession of Zeccolo.

Angelo, who was in the house next to that of the Reed's and from which the fatal shot was fired, was positively identified by several persons as the murderer, and it looked as though nothing could save him until in his fright he confessed to having seen the shooting and told the police to find the guilty man.

Theory Held by Police

The police charge that Zeccola must have crouched behind a window, steadied himself by pressing his left hand against the wire screen, and resting the muzzle of his pistol against the netting, taking careful aim at his victim only about thirty feet away and hitting him squarely in the left temple. The young man dropped dead.

Next door to the Reed home is a two-story frame dwelling, half of which is rented by Mrs. Marie Angelo, who has had many boarders. Among the latter was her brother, Zeccolo, and among her many visitors were Michael Angelo, her brother-in-law. The house occupied by the Italians sets back about twenty feet from the street and forms a sort of an ell to the Reed home. Back of the Reed house is a grape arbor and back of that an outhouse that comes within a few feet of the house next door, so that the three buildings roughly form three sides of a square.

Cat Raided Chicken Coop.

Helen Reed, the dead man's foster sister, said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter yesterday: "Only the severest punishment the law provides should be meted out to the man who killed my poor brother. There is not one single palliating circumstance.

"We were not particularly troubled by our Italian neighbors until a few weeks ago, when a cat owned by Mrs. Angelo raided our chicken house and killed several of the chicks. We protested, but Mrs. Angelo paid little attention to us.

"Soon after there was another raid and some more of the chickens were found dead. My brother insisted that the cat be kept away from our place and the Italians got very much excited over what they considered an insult.

"More of our chickens were killed, and then I went to Mrs. Angelo and told her that if the slaughter continued her cat would be shot. She picked up a knife and ordered me from the place.

Sister Owned Pistol.

"Up to date twenty-five of our chickens have been killed by her cat.

"Now the only weapon in our house is a twenty two-or three pistol that belongs to me. I never paid much attention to the pistol until some months ago a tramp tried to get into the house when I was alone. I was in great danger and I hunted up the pistol and fired a shot out of the window. That frightened off the man, but since then I have kept the weapon handy.

"Last evening, when Charlie came home and heard that more of our chickens had been killed and that the cat was even then in our yard, he took the pistol and fired one shot. It went wild, but he would have been justified in killing the animal. The Italians next door were frantic over the incident and I feared trouble. I saw Angelo and a man known in the neighborhood as 'the tailor,' but whose name is Zeccolo, standing near the kitchen door of the house next door, and when about 7 o'clock after supper Charlie started for the building in the rear I begged him not to go, but he only laughed at me and started out.

Had Premonition.

"I went half-way with him—to about the middle of the grape arbor, and there I waited anxiously until he should return.

"Something told me there was danger. The two Italians had re-entered their house. Suddenly Charlie appeared. There was a stir at the kitchen window of the house next door—the window nearest to where Charlie stood—and then there came a shot, and Charlie fell, his head inside the door.

"Almost at the same minute Angelo rushed from the house and jumped on a bicycle. Even as I ran to Charlie I could hear commotion in the house next door, but no one came to my assistance from there when I cried out that my brother was murdered. I found him lying very still on the floor with the blood coming from his head. I clasped him to my breast and begged him to speak to me, but I soon realized that he would never speak again, and the kindest, dearest brother in all the world was dead.

Hunt for Angelo.

"My father had been standing in the rear door of our house when the shot was fired and he was the first to come to me. Then others arrived and I told them to catch Angelo. 'He knows about this,' I said, and then the doctor came and we learned for sure that Charlie was dead."

400 TELEGRAPHERS IN BOSTON WAIT STRIKE ORDER

Both Companies in Hub Will Be Affected by Decision in San Francisco.

FOUR hundred telegraphers of Greater Boston, members of the local branch of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, are waiting and ready to go on strike Tuesday morning, if the existing controversy between the organization and the Western Union and Postal companies is not settled before that time.

The executive board of the union, Labor Commissioner Neill and officers of both companies are in San Francisco to-day in an effort to stop the strike and bring to an end all troubles. If a settlement is not reached by Monday night strikes will be ordered in Kansas City, Chicago, Boston and New York in an effort to bring the companies to terms.

In Boston all union telegraphers employed by both companies will quit work whether employed in offices of the company or in newspaper offices. Brokers pay their operators direct and will not be affected. The commercial business of the city is certain to be hurt should the Boston telegraphers strike.

Officials of the Boston union said last night that should the strike be ordered in Boston the companies could not find enough telegraphers to handle their business.

New York, July 13.—Telegraph operators in New York and Chicago consider the situation extremely serious and have prepared to walk out at a moment's notice, according to President Joseph F. Ahearn of the local union, who to-day received a cipher message from San Francisco.

It is said, however, that there is little likelihood of any radical action before next week's business gets under way, as it is the policy of the union to time the walkout when it would be most effective. In an official statement issued late this afternoon, Mr. Ahearn said:

"The telegraph situation is extremely critical. President Robert C. Clowry of the Western Union Telegraph Company issued a statement on July 3 in which he said that the agreement entered into with Labor Commissioner Neill would be carried out by the Western Union Telegraph Company.

"The same afternoon I sent one of the discharged employes to see Superintendent E. M. Mulford with a copy of the public statement made by President Clowry. He told this man he would not put him back to work unless he severed his connection with Local 16 and he laughed heartily when shown Colonel Clowry's statement.

"Our men and women feel that we must take some action to protect our membership. We have secured over 90 per cent of the operators in the Western Union offices throughout Greater New York.

"[illegible] with the executive committee, [illegible] ground and will attend a [illegible] meeting in San Francisco to-night. Western Union officials have been invited to attend this meeting.

"Chicago operators are ready to call a mass meeting to-morrow if word is received from San Francisco to do so. We have in New York excellent facilities for reaching our men in a hurry and will do likewise if so instructed."

PUT GIRL IN CELL; SEEK RUNYAN LOOT

"Broadway Flo," Sister of Mrs. Carter, Brought From Chicago to Face Court.

MAKES SCENES ON TRAIN

New York, July 13.—Formally charged with being an accomplice to her sister, Mrs. Laura M. Carter, in the reception and disposal of $26,000 stolen from the Windsor Trust Company by Chester B. Runyan, the former teller, Florence Wood, known as "Broadway Flo," was brought back from Chicago to-night by Patrolman Kahn of the central office and is lodged in the Mercer street police station. She will be arraigned in the Tombs Police Court to-morrow.

"Broadway Flo" made the trip back from Chicago extremely exciting for Kahn. After consenting to return without requisition papers she created several scenes. Coming over the Michigan Central the train crossed into Canada. There she asserted herself. She charged Kahn with robbing her of the bank books seized when she was arrested and aroused all the passengers.

When United States Customs officers boarded the train this morning on crossing into New York the woman refused to allow the officers to examine her effects, arousing the whole train at 6 o'clock in the morning.

At the Union Station she called a policeman and demanded Kahn's arrest, charging him with robbing her.

Beyond saying she went to Chicago on a visit June 27, two days before Runyan stole the money and denying knowledge of the stolen funds, she refused to talk, demanding an attorney.

The last entry in the woman's bank-book was made the 10th, but she has a key to the safe deposit vault, and it will be searched. No hunt has been made through her trunks, but the officers are doubtful of finding any money there.

ENTER CHURCH, STEAL CASH FROM HEATHEN

Reno, July 13.—Entering the portals of the Methodist Church here, a thief stole the birthday contribution box containing $48. No clue was left by the burglar, but as the money was locked in the desk used by the superintendent of collections and known only to him and a few members of the congregation, suspicions have arisen against one of the latter. The police are investigating the matter and hope by to-morrow to have procured a confession.

'NO INTIMIDATION,' SAYS UNION AGENT

Guntner Declares He Was Himself Threatened by Man Who Accuses Him.

IS HELD IN $500 BONDS

Charged with threatening John Sylvia, George N. Gutner, fifty years old, of No. 26 Folsom street, Roslindale, business agent of the Woodworkers and Upholsterers' Union, was arraigned in the Municipal Court yesterday, and his case continued till Tuesday. He was held in $500.

Guntner, in speaking with a reporter for the Boston Sunday American yesterday, said:

"I am the business manager of the Hardwood Finishers' and Upholsterers' Union. I approached this man Sylvia and asked him if he would join the union. He said he would. He further stated that he would pay $2.80 to the organization of his own volition.

"In the shop he made a statement to a fellow worker that Manuel Andrews had advised him to become affiliated with the union. When I received that intelligence I went to see him and requested him to join. I gave him a receipt for $2.80 signed by me, which he promised to pay to one of the men in the shop who was connected with the union.

"He failed to make good his promise on the following Saturday. On Monday I went to him and demanded my receipt of him. He told me that he didn't have it with him. Then I made a more forcible demand and he gave it to me.

"I then informed him that he was a liar; that a man who told lies would steal. He threatened to punish me for insinuating that he was a liar. I then told him that I was all through and would not have anything further to do with him relative to union matters.

"A warrant was sworn out for my arrest on the charge of intimidation, to the effect that I advised him to leave the shop where he was employed."

INDIAN KILLED IN FIGHT WITH POSSE

Phoenix, Ariz., July 13.—An Apache Indian was killed on the McDowell reservation, twenty-eight miles from here. Superintendent Goodman ordered the Indian forced off the reservation. A posse attempted to enforce the order when the recalcitrant fired, wounding another Indian. The posse returned the fire and the Indian they were attempting to eject was killed.

FALLS 7,000 FEET, UNHURT, IN AIRSHIP

Knabenshue's Propeller Cuts Open Gas Bag—Aeronaut Improvises Parachute.

JUMPS WHEN NEAR GROUND

Springfield, O., July 13.—Cliff Robinson of Buffalo fell 7,000 feet with Knabenshue's airship at 7.05 o'clock this evening and escaped injury with the exception of a slight scar on his forehead.

Thousands of people who were looking toward the heavens watching his flight saw the balloon drop to one side when the gas rushed out.

Then the machine began to fall rapidly and the crowd helplessly watched, expecting to see Robinson dashed to pieces.

Instead he was found calmly surveying his dilapidated machine when the people rushed toward him. He was very pale and his forehead was bleeding slightly, but otherwise he was unharmed.

Robinson says that when he started on his second trial he went higher than usual so as to get free of the wind, and was struck by counter currents. The propeller was thrown against the end of the balloon and the rapidly revolving wheel cut open the gas bag.

Forms Parachute of Balloon.

It immediately began to settle rapidly. Robinson climbed quickly to the top of the propeller, which up-ended the balloon, forming a parachute. The air then entered the bag and the machine came down more gradually. When within a few feet of the ground Robinson jumped out. The engine and air ship apparatus was smashed but the gas bag can be mended.

It was planned for Robinson to make a flight this afternoon from Spring Grove Park, two miles south of the city, to the centre, as an exhibition previous to his engagement next week. He was unable to sail against level winds. After using up half an hour, he came down and secured more gas and started up again. His propeller did the rest.

Airship at New England Parks.

Knabenshue exhibited his airship at Vanity Fair, at Providence within the last month. After making daily flights there he went to the White City at Worcester. Two years ago he exhibited his airship with great success at the Brockton Fair.

INFORMATION BUREAU AT BOSTON AMERICAN OFFICE

Scattered all over the great United States, in Canada and in other countries there are former residents of Boston who are coming back for Old Home Week.

They have been away from this burgh for many years. They have lost all traces of former friends, schoolmates and the companions of early days. It is a foregone conclusion that they would like to get in touch with the friends and acquaintances of the old days.

There is a way to do it.

Make use of the Boston American's Old Home Week Postoffice and Information Bureau. It has just been opened at No. 80 Summer street. It is absolutely free.

Seeking Schoolmates?

You, Bill Brown, having remained at the Old Home town all the days of your life, probably desire to meet Sam Jones, who went to school with you in the early seventies. Sam has not been heard from for many years, but he is likely to come here for the Old Home Week celebration.

If Sam does come he will not be in Boston many minutes before he hears of the Boston American's Bureau. He'll find it all right and he will look up his old friends.

This is what Bill Brown should do. He should find No. 80 Summer street without the slightest delay and there register the names of those he wants to see again as well as where he may be found.

Therefore when Sam shows up and finds his name registered he also discovers that Bill Brown wants to talk over old times with him.

New Sights in Old Town.

You can imagine Sam's excitement. "My old chum, Bill Brown. Wants to see me. Just tell me the quickest way to get to this street in Dorchester that I never heard of when I was here."

That's what Sam says, and an hour later he and Bill are slapping each other on the back.

It is to bring about reunions of this kind that the Boston American Old Home Week postoffice and information bureau was established.

There will be a great crowd in Boston from July 28 to August 3. Thousands of former residents are planning to come back for the week's festivities. It is easy to see the impossibility of looking up all the old friends who are scattered all over the city and many some distance out in the suburbs. Boston has made many changes in twenty years or even less.

Letters Pouring In.

Already the [illegible] bureau has only been open a short time. The letters from distant Jones and near Smith and others are beginning to come in. They desire to register the names of many people that they believe will be in Boston during Old Home Week and who may not be able to locate former friends.

Here is one of them:

I THINK it was about twenty years ago that my old friend Frank Nelson left Boston, and went to Chicago. I heard from him once after he went, that he was going to Kansas. I have no letter and don't remember the name of the town. Frank ought to be here for Old Home Week. So please register his name and say that this old pal wants to hear from him just as soon as he gets to Boston.

Very truly yours,
DANIEL CODLIN,
Care Boston Elevated Railway.

Here is [illegible] the BOSTON AMERICAN [illegible] with The Bureau [illegible] The Bureau was established in order that used for [illegible] hotel or boarding place. The letter reads:

Utica, N. Y.

I AM going to be in Boston during Old Home Week and I want to know a good place to stop. What do you recommend that is not too dear?

CHARLES E. SULLIVAN.

Here is a [illegible] who wants to meet an old schoolmate:

Old Home Week Bureau.

If Julia Doubleday, who lived in Dorchester fifteen years ago, went to [illegible] in Boston during Old Home Week I want her to call on me. She and I went to the high school together. I haven't heard from her in years. I would like very much to see her again.

HARRIET DAVIS.

Don't Forget Address.

Unfortunately the writer did not send in her address. It is hoped that she will for it is more than possible that Julia Doubleday will be in Boston during Old Home Week and will use the Boston American Bureau.

The Bureau will help not only Boston people but those who are coming here from other cities. The names will all be filed and printed. Thus each day the home people and the visitors both will know who is still living in the old town.

There are going to be reunions galore. The Boston American Old Home Week Postoffice and Information Bureau is going to help along as many reunions as it can.

Don't be afraid to use the Bureau and it is a good plan to make out your list of names immediately.

HOLD TEN-YEAR OLD BOY AS MURDERER

New London, Conn., July 13.—Confined in the Franklin Street, jail is a precious youth of ten years, held on a charge of murdering a playmate of equal age, a week ago. The youthful slayer, Frank Morgan, and his victim, Ivy Lewis Rogers, resided with their parents in Ledyard, an isolated village, three miles East of Yale's rowing squads training quarters, at Gales Ferry. The Morgan boy is accused by Coroner Franklin H. Brown of having deliberately levelled a single-barreled shotgun at the Lewis boy, the charge striking him in the abdomen. Within a few hours Lewis died at the Memorial Hospital in this city.

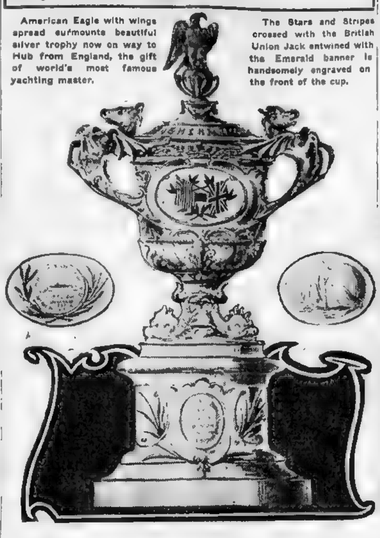
It is alleged by neighbors that the boys quarrelled over some fish and the Morgan lad had the loaded gun secreted in a barn and was awaiting an opportunity to "get square" with his former chum.

A hearing will be held July 22 and Morgan's father will employ counsel to defend his son. The father claims the shooting was accidental.

Young Morgan is reported to have recently coaxed his younger brother to crawl under a horse on the pretext that there were pennies beneath the animals hoofs. The younger Morgan was kicked in the face and spent nearly three weeks in the hospital, narrowly escaping losing the sight of both eyes.

FISHERS TO RACE FOR LIPTON CUP

Solid silver trophy is offered by famous British sportsman in contest during Old Home Week festivities.



American Eagle with wings spread surmounts beautiful silver trophy now on way to Hub from England, the gift of world's most famous yachting master.

The Stars and Stripes crossed with the British Union Jack entwined with the Emerald banner is handsomely engraved on the front of the cup.

The magnificent solid silver cup presented by Sir Thomas Lipton, of England, as a trophy for the forthcoming fishermen's race, in connection with the Boston Old Home week celebration, is now on the way to Boston, and will probably be on exhibition in this city before the date of the race.

A cablegram received by Winfield M. Thompson of the race committee from Sir Thomas states that the cup was shipped on Wednesday. A photograph of the beautiful prize had already reached the committee. The trophy is in the form of a loving cup, having three handles composed of seahorses, representing Speed.

Between each of these handles is an oval panel, one having the American and British flags, and the Shamrock racing flag entwined with laurel, all enamelled in proper colors, the others consisting of a representation in relief of a fishing schooner and the city of Boston seal.

The cup is supported by three dolphins. The designation of the race is round the cover, and the whole is surmounted by a figure of the American eagle standing with partly spread wings on a small globe.

The cup stands upon an ebonized pedestal with a silver, partly gilt, shield upon which the following inscription is engraved: "Presented by Sir Thomas J. Lipton, Bart., K. C. V. O., Boston Old Home Week, 1907." There is a similar shield on the reverse for recording the name of the winner.

TWAIN'S DAUGHTER STUDYING IN HUB

Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, has hidden herself in Boston to study music. She has eluded her society friends in New York, given up all her society engagements and will devote herself strictly to her studies.

In "Chapters from My Autobiography" by Mark Twain in the North American Review, the father says:

"Ordinary punishments answered very well for Susy, but it was much less easy to devise punishments that would reform Clara. This was because she was a philosopher who was always turning her attention to finding something good and satisfactory and entertaining in everything that came her way; consequently it was sometimes pretty discouraging to the troubled mother to find that after all her pains and thought in inventing what she meant to be a severe and reform-compelling punishment, the child had entirely missed the severities through her native disposition to get interest and pleasure out of them as novelties.

"The grieved and worried mother finally shut Clara up in a very small closet and left her there for fifteen minutes, it was all the mother could endure. Then she came back and listened for the sobs, but there were not any, there were muffled and inarticulate sounds, but they could not be construed into sobs.

"The mother waited half an hour longer by that time she was suffering so intensely with sorrow and compassion for the little prisoner that she was unable to wait any longer for the distressed sounds which she had counted upon to inform her when there had been punishment enough and the reform accomplished.

She opened the closet to set the prisoner free and take her back into her loving favor and forgiveness, but the result was not the one expected. The captive had made of the closet a fairy cavern out of the closet and was gayly fairies out of the clothes hanging from the hooks, and was having a fine and independent good time and requested permission to spend the rest of the day there."

The subject of this charming sketch, now grown to young womanhood, is selecting Boston for her musical instruction partly because she thinks there will be less social distraction here. She does not know so many people in Boston as she does in New York. So she will not have her attention diverted from her musical purpose.

"I believe that I can do beter here," she says, "as I am not so well acquainted as I am in New York."

DOUBLE FARE STIRS VOTERS TO ACTION

In the face of signed protests from the citizens of Needham and Newton and an official statement from the Railroad Commissioners that their action is unjust, the Newton Street Railway Company beginning to-morrow is going to charge double fares on its lines between Needham and Newton. An extra five cents will be charged at the bridge at Newton Upper Falls.

The citizens of Newton and Needham will continue their fight against what they term the extortion of the Newton Street Railway Company, and shortly the Selectmen of Needham are to have a conference with the officials of the railway.

Selectman Powers of Needham said yesterday: "We feel that the town of Needham has been discriminated against, and that we should not bear an assessment when we are supplying the business that is the strongest of the road."

At the Needham town meeting Tuesday night the increase in fares will be discussed and condemned.

WAR DECLARATION BEFORE FIGHTING

Hostilities Must Be Delayed, Peace Conference Likely to Decide.

PROPOSITION BY FRANCE

United States, Great Britain and Japan Opposed It, but Are Won Over.

Washington, July 13.—News received at the State Department from The Hague indicates a probability that the Peace Conference will agree to the proposition that there must be a declaration of war before the commencement of hostilities.

It has not been determined what period of time must elapse between the declaration and the beginning of actual fighting, and that subject is still being threshed out in committee. Upon the main point, however, it looks as though the rules of warfare among civilized nations are going to be amended in this important particular.

Violation by Japan.

The question was first brought forcibly to the attention of the world at the start of the Russo-Japanese war, through the action of the Japanese in attacking two Russian cruisers in the harbor of Chemulpo, Korea, before war had been actually declared.

Generally this action was condemned and recognizing the possible great advantages such a proceeding might give one belligerent over another the powers are endeavoring to formulate a specific rule on this subject.

It is a question in which the United States has a vital interest for in the improbable event of a war, especially on the Pacific, proximity of a hostile power to the Philippines or Hawaii would enable to concentrate its forces and probably seize the archipelagos before the news that war had been declared could reach Washington. Especially would this be true if the cable were cut, which would probably be one of the first objectives of the attacking party.

Suggested by France.

Despite the recognition of this fact, the American delegates, as well as those of Great Britain and Japan, were at first unfavorably disposed towards the proposition, which was advanced by France, that declaration of war should precede hostilities.

In the case of the United States representatives the reason for this was the fact that under the Constitution Congress alone can declare war, so that action by that body would be notification enough. All three of these powers, however, have now withdrawn their objections, and there now remains only the question of details to be agreed upon.

A Prayer for World Peace.

BISHOP LAWRENCE has authorized the use of the following prayer during The Hague conference. It will be used in all the Episcopal churches of Massachusetts.

O ALMIGHTY GOD, whose Son came to this earth with tidings of Peace and Good Will among men, guide, we beseech Thee, the counsels of the representatives of Nations now assembled in the name of Peace.

Endue them with the gift of wisdom and a desire to do Thy will.

Increase in them and all the peoples of the earth the spirit of righteousness, truth and love; that Thy Kingdom may come and Thy Name be glorified, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TO ASK PLENARY SESSION TO DISCUSS RED CROSS REPORT

The Hague, July 13.—The special committee charged to draw up a convention adapting the Red Cross to naval warfare has finished its work, which will be presented July 16 at the meeting of the committee on maritime war, with a request for the convention of a plenary session of the conference, in order that the convention may be definitely approved.

An official statement issued to-day by the American delegates explains just what occurred yesterday when the Korean delegation which was excluded from the conference, was received by Joseph H. Choate.

The American delegate merely told the Koreans that the United States always felt good will toward Korea, but expressed no opinion about the present condition of the country. He told the Koreans he did not believe any action could be taken here and that if they desired to make representations to the United States they must address themselves to the government at Washington.

MEYER RUINS PETTY ROCKEFELLER PLOT

Washington, July 13.—Postmaster General George Von L. Meyer to-day climbed into the band wagon of celebrities and took a seat with Judge Landis, of Chicago, his passage having been earned because he took a fall out of the oil king, John D. Rockefeller.

Incidentally, the Postmaster General showed his contempt for the dread that has seemingly surrounded the name of Rockefeller in the Post Office Department by concluding in one week a case that has hung fire for several years, and which Messrs. Payne and Cortelyou, when they filled the office, could not settle.

In the Adirondacks is the great Rockefeller estate. At the edge of the great tract of land held by the oil king is Brandon, N. Y. It was once a fourth-class post office. Rockefeller had the office there discontinued and an office established at Bay Pond, a small settlement three miles within the borders of his estate, because of the refusal of a civil war veteran named Lamora to sell him his property.

Bars Veteran from Mal Rights.

Lamora, going to Bay Pond after his mail, stopped to fish in one of the Rockefeller streams. One of Rockefeller's patrol discovered the fisherman and he was ejected from the estate.

Then Lamora started in to fight for his rights to go to the post office, no matter where it was, in order to get his mail. He went to court, but the appeal to the judiciary was useless. He was a man without a postoffice.

He took his case to the Postoffice Department. Cortelyou, the present Secretary of the Treasury, could not see what could be done for the Civil War veteran, ostracised from the use of the mails by the oil king.

Last week the case was brought to Postmaster General Meyer's attention. He ordered an investigation.

To-day he directed that an office be established at Brandon. There Lamora and the fourteen families that make it their home, can enjoy the privileges of the Government's postal service and be free from the long three mile drive to Bay Pond, the Rockefeller village.

In view o fthe fact that there are between fifty and a hundred persons, all employes of the Rockefeller estate, living at Bay Pond, the office there will not be discontinued.

'GIVE UP DAUGHTER,' DEMAND ON STRAINE

Unless Robert F. Straine, clubman, financier and now inmate of the county jail at Salem, charged with the attempted abduction of his daughter, Dorothy, and her French nurse, Marie Blanc, agrees to quietly give up the guardianship of and parental authority over the young girl, serious charges will be made against him when the Probate Court takes up the suit now brought by Roland S. Boyden, the associate guardian.

Several consultations were held yesterday. First there was a meeting between Harrison A. Plympton, attorney for Straine and for Anna F. Duncan, the nurse who accompanied him when he tried to kidnap his daughter from her home in Wellesley, and Roland S. Boyden, associate guardian for the young woman. Neither of these lawyers would say what the meeting was about, but immediately after this Mr. Plympton was visited by Mrs. Duncan, and they held a long consultation.

Case Heard Tuesday.

Straine and the nurse will appear in Dedham court Tuesday to answer to the attempted kidnapping charge. The former, in spite of his many acquaintances, has failed to secure bail and the latter owes her freedom to the fact that she gave herself up originally and has been released upon her own recognizance.

So far as Straine is concerned, the prosecution on Tuesday will spend its force on the charge of attacking Mlle. Blanc. In view of the fact that no proceedings had at that time been brought against him to take away from him his authority as parent, he might claim the right to seize his daughter by force and even, if necessary, to incarcerate her in the padded cell fitted by "Dr." Straine.

Every effort is being made to find a middle-aged man known as Jack Waite, who accompanied Straine and Mrs. Duncan to the house in Wellesley in their automobile and who disappeared after the frustration of the efforts to carry Miss Straine away. It is known that this man Waite was picked up in the automobile soon after the start from Boston and was evidently expected just where he was found. It has been learned also that Straine spent a night at the James street house where the padded cell had been rigged up and where Mrs. Duncan had taken up her residence.

LOAN FIRM CRASH RUINS HUNDREDS

Providence, R. I., July 13.—With the filing of attachments to-day against property built b ythe Home Realty Company, which collapsed early this week, hundreds of working people scattered all over Providence and its suburbs saw the savings of a lifetime wiped out. Hundreds of men and women besieged the offices of the company to-day trying to learn their position.

Three attachments were filed by the Philips Lead & Supply Company, the largest lien being for $154.80. The lumber firm of H. A. Grimwood & Company will record hundreds of liens Monday totalling thousands.

The company offered to build homes for working people, allowing them to pay for them in installments. A large tract of land in Cranston was built up by this concern and rapidly filled by thrifty people, who had saved enough to start a home of their own.

Like a thunderbolt came the announcement from the attorneys for the Home Realty Company that their client was in financial embarrassment. Immediately their creditors, who had furnished them with materials for the building of homes, came clamoring to them. The filing of these attachments is the result.

In their statement to the public the company gave as the reason for their failure the high cost of labor and material.

It is expected that there will be a meeting of those owners and occupants of houses built by this company in order to find out just where they stand and whether they are to lose all equity in the homes for which they gave all their scanty savings.

FEAR DISAGREEMENT IN HAYWOOD TRIAL AFTER 2 MONTHS' LEGAL BATTLE

Jurors Split Into Hostile Factions Over Trivial Matters, Likely to Wrangle.

DEFENCE RESTS ITS CASE

State Introduces Evidence in Rebuttal—Arguments Are Due on Thursday.

LIE GIVEN TO ORCHARD

Prosecution's Witness Forced to Sullenly Admit Falsity of Assassin's Story.

Haywood Trial Summary

Trial began 65 days ago.

Evidence developed for 46 days.

State now introducing rebuttal evidence.

Estimated that the evidence will be completed and summing up address be begun next Thursday.

Consensus of opinion is that jury will disagree.

BOISE, Ida., July 13.—"Defence rests."

This statement from Edmund E. Richardson, [illegible] of counsel for the defense in the trial of William D. Haywood for the murder of Frank Steunenberg, to-day started the third epoch of the famous trial.

With the end of the trial in sight, a disagreement of the jury seems inevitable. There are many reasons for this. The twelve men composing the Haywood jury are beyond the middle age average; are not by nature sympathetic, they have already been [illegible] among themselves. One man [illegible] card games in the jury quarters [illegible] to take ordinary exercise and thus deprive the other ten of badly needed walks while three congregate by themselves nightly and decline to have any dealings with their fellow members of the jury.

Orchard Smooth Faced.

To-day's developments were devoid of sensations. Evidence was introduced indicating that the trail [illegible] was shown that [illegible] testified Orchard [illegible] "things doing in Idaho soon, could have been on such a train as he described; that Orchard had no moustache, as [illegible] swears, and that Orchard really was in Salt Lake about November 28 or 29.

Evidence impeaching the testimony of Dr. McGee, who swore [illegible] was in the Coeur d'Alenes in July, 1901 and of "Big Bill" [illegible] Davis, who denied participating in the blowing up of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mill at Wardner, was also offered. Several witnesses contradicted McGee.

The State opponent of Davis was Willis Dewey, late town marshal of Goldfield, Col., a member of the Gem Union in Coeur d'Alene in 1899. On April 29, he swore, he went to the [illegible] where he "saw W. F. Davis handing [illegible] ammunition." Dewey swore Davis was leader of the men.

Wages from Pinkertons.

On cross-examination, his answers had to be literally dragged out by Attorney Richardson. He admitted the union hall meeting was an open one, that no speeches were made and no vote taken. This contradicts Orchard, who swore that speeches for and against the attack on the mill were made and finally the men lined up for a vote. Dewey admitted Ed Travers, superintendent of the Vindicator mine, got him to come here. He said he got wages and expenses for coming. He expects his money from the Pinkertons when he gets home. He got $10 at the Pinkerton office in Denver. He denied being promised immunity for testifying.

POSEY-BOWIE FEUD FOLLOWS ACQUITTAL

Deputy Sheriffs Guard Slayers' Home From Attack by Posey's Friends.

La Plata, Md., July 13.—The Posey-Bowie feud is on. Warrants were issued to-day for Dennis Posey, charging him with attempts to stab Frank Dement and William Bragon.

The former was a witness for Mrs. Mollie Bowie and her son Henry, who admit killing Posey's brother Hubert, because the latter betrayed and refused to wed Priscilla Bowie, Mrs. Bowie's daughter and sister of Henry, the son. Brageonia, a hotel keeper at [illegible], he [illegible] home, is said to have defended Dement when, as the warrant goes, young Posey attacked him.

Mrs. Bowie, Henry, Priscilla and the girl's baby returned to the Posey home after the mother and son had been acquitted. So ugly have been the threats against them, however, by the dead man's friends that two deputy sheriffs are guarding them. Posey, it is charged, attacked Dement with a knife, was knocked down by Brageonia, turned on the latter and was only beaten off after a hard fight.

Posey disappeared before the warrants could be served and is believed by the authorities to have gone to Washington. The police have been asked to arrest him there. The local authorities are fearful of more clashes.

Members of the jury say plainly that the "unwritten law" was their guide in returning their verdict acquitting Mrs. Bowie and her son.

"Every one has a divine right to protect his own," said several members of the panel when questioned to-night, "and it is not for us to take it away. We made up our minds on the evidence long before we entered the jury room."

Fair College Girl Said Yes to Harvard Orator on Class Day

Engagement of Seth Thomas Gano and Miss Adelaide Beunke Just Announced.

Seth Thomas Gano, Harvard Class Day orator, now private secretary to Major Henry L. Higginson, banker, is going to marry Miss Adelaide Beunke, Radcliffe College graduate, as a result of a Class Day romance.

Class Day is the biggest day in the year for a Harvard man. It was particularly a great day this year for Seth Gano [illegible] he was through college. Miss Beunke, who is the daughter of [illegible] Fred L. Beunke of Cambridge, came to Class Day. In the evening, when the colored lanterns swung to and fro [illegible] the trees and the most [illegible] seniors in their caps moved about with their mothers, sisters and sweethearts, Gano told her the old, old story. She said "Yes."

20 Tables in Play at Newport Society Women's 'Canfield's'

Leaders Flock to Opening of Bridge Club Scored by Rev. Walter Lowrie

Newport, R. I., July 13.—The Women's Bridge Club, which Rev. Walter Lowrie last year called "Canfield's by the Sea," was opened for the season this afternoon with twenty tables in use.

Two thousand dollars' worth of flowers enhanced the beauty of the rooms in James Gordon Bennett's villa, in which there was held a reception, followed by general play, to which none except women were admitted.

Last year the club gave its parties in the William B. Travers Bungalow in Ocean avenue.

This year so many women wanted to join the club that the Bennett villa was leased. To its fine furnishings other fittings were added, so that by the time play began this afternoon the entire house was a bower of beauty.

Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont was among the first to arrive at the club to-day. She was closely followed by Mrs. May Brady [illegible] Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. [illegible] Livingston Ludlow, Miss Anna Sands, Mrs. James F. Gerard, Mrs. Moses Taylor Campbell, Miss Evelyn Burden, Miss Lota Robinson, Mrs. Philip A. Clark, formerly Miss Greta Pomeroy, Mrs. George B. De Forest, Miss Maude Wetmore, Mrs. Peter D. CASTLE SQUARE HOTEL FIRE DID $10 DAMAGE

Large Audience in Adjoining Theatre Slightly Disturbed.

A $10 fire occurred last night in a second-floor suite of the Castle Square Hotel. The blaze was extinguished by a chemical stream from Protective 2, which responded to a still alarm. A presentation of "Il Trovatore" was in progress at the Castle Square Theatre, adjoining, with the usual audience assembled. Beyond a trifle of excitement the fire caused no alarm among the theatre-goers.

VETERAN MURDERED FOR HIS PENSION, AND HOME FIRED, SAY POLICE.

MONEY AND MUSKET GONE

Empty Kerosene Can Found Near Charred Remains of Civil War Hero.

Companions Had Been Previously Forbidden to Again Visit the House.

GOFFSTOWN, N. H., July 13.—After a night spent in revelry with riotous companions at his home half a mile west of this village Nelson B. Richards, a veteran of the Civil war, was found dead in his bed to-day in the burned and charred ruins of his house.

His skull was fractured and his body had been frightfully mutilated. Money and an old army musket that had been [illegible] had disappeared.

That Richards was murdered for back pension money which he drew Friday, and that the house was set on fire and burned as he lay dead on the bed is the theory held by the officers who are investigating the case.

Edward Carr, a neighbor, declared to-night that when he passed the Richards place late Friday night lights were in the windows, and songs sung by several voices in the house reached his ears.

At intervals the music of a cracked graphophone was heard. Shouting and laughter reached him as he was driving along the road.

A few hours later section hands arriving at work on the railroad near by discovered Richards's house in flames. By the time that they and the firemen reached the scene the house had been consumed and with it [illegible]

In the ruins of what had been Richards's sleeping room [illegible] of the veteran, fully clad, lay upon the charred embers of what had been a bed. A can that had contained kerosene [illegible] the charred [illegible]

Richards's legs were drawn up under [illegible] His skull had been fractured and there were mutilations on the body.

Not a trace of the pension money amounting to a large sum which he had drawn the day before in Manchester was to be found. The bayonet that had been attached to Richards's old army musket lay on the floor of the sleeping room. The musket itself had disappeared. There was no graphophone and no trace of one in the ruins. The lock on the front door showed that the door had been unlocked.

Medical Referee George M. Davis made an autopsy of the body which had been severely burned.

He made a report to County Solicitor Borsbert and immediately the sheriff and other officers began an investigation. It was found that on Friday Richards had gone to Manchester and had there been paid $40, his monthly pension, and had received back pension money to considerable amount.

Women Ordered Away.

It was also discovered that upon prior occasions when he had received his pension he had been in the habit of inviting friends—men and women—to his house and there holding a celebration. Drink was never absent from these festivities. The Sheriff's officers found that the Goffstown police had ordered two of the women who had frequented the house to remain away from it but that they had visited Richards there after the issuance of the order against them. Two men who had also been at the house were sought, but to-night it was impossible to find them.

Richards's funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon and an inquest will be held Monday.

Richards served in the Civil War with the Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers. He is survived by five children, Mrs. Joseph Carnway and Jennie, Ward, Alice and Percy Richards. The last named is a soldier in the United States army and is stationed in the West. Mrs. Carnway and her sister Jennie Richards live at Goffstown and the others at Manchester.

COEY WINS 24-HOUR CHICAGO AUTO RACE

Close Pressed by Buck and Mengini In Long Grind. Protest Entered.

Chicago, July 13.—Bespattered with mud, almost worn out from the strain of a twenty-four hour wild auto dash about the Harlem track C. A. Coey of Chicago finished the grind to-day, with 846 miles to his credit, four miles in front of Buck and Mengini in a Matheson. A protest was immediately filed by the Matheson that the scoring system was imperfect, and Manager Picard of the Matheson is preparing affidavits from disinterested parties and other contestants tending to prove his contention.

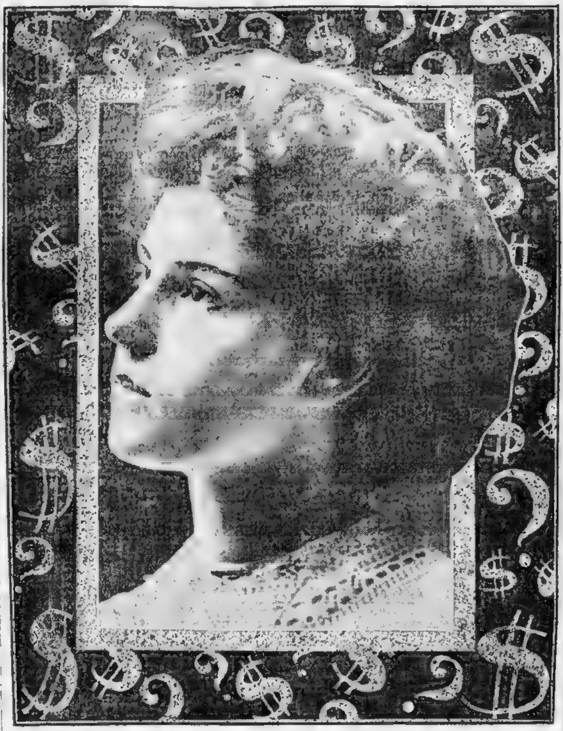
A crowd of over 12,000 saw the finish of the long grind, and Coey was forced to bow again and again to the many plaudits of the crowd.

The final hours of the race were most exciting, the features being supplied by Mengini and Buck, driving the Matheson. This pair gave an exhibition of track driving that was simply superb, conditions considered.

The final score was as follows:

C. A. Coey (Thomas), 846; Mengini and Buck (Matheson), 842; Watson and Wagoner (Haynes), 818; Farnsworth and Sutkas (Cadillac), [illegible]4; Friend, Betts and Zirbes (Mitchell), [illegible]; Charles W. Price (Maxwell), 581.

Here's the Red Dollar Sign Girl: Catch Her at Nantasket To-day and Win a $50 Prize



$250 in Gold for the Lucky Finders at Nantasket Beach. Try For It.

By the Girl with the Red Dollar Sign.

Here is the picture of my face which I said I would publish in the Boston SUNDAY AMERICAN. It was taken by Purdy of Boston a few days ago, and I consider it a good likeness of myself.

This ought to make it easy to find me to-day at Nantasket Beach where I shall have $50 in gold for the person who first recognizes me. It will certainly be a great deal easier to identify me as a result of this picture than it was to capture me last Sunday at Revere Beach.

I do not propose to tell you how I shall be dressed—I do not want to make it too easy, and I should not think you would want to know after seeing my face here. I may think it necessary to disguise myself just in order to give you a little healthful recreation in looking for me.

Here are two things for you to keep in mind.

I shall be in Paragon Park between 3 and 4 o'clock. I will probably go into one or two of the shows. If I am not caught I shall reappear in Paragon Park about 7 o'clock. I shall stay there until I am found. A good place to be on the lookout for me would be in front of the Bostock Animal Show.

Do not forget the golden salutation. In order that I may recognize you it will be necessary for you to ask me plainly in these words:

"Are you the Girl with the Red Dollar Sign? It belongs to me."

According to strict instructions that have been given to me I shall not recognize any one connected with the Boston American and Paragon Park or any of my personal acquaintances. The man, woman or child who picks me out must be a stranger.

* * * *

Have you read the Buried Treasure story in this issue of the Sunday American? If you haven't, get hold of it at once.

In it you will find hints—and very strong ones—as to just where you will find the rest of the $200 in gold hidden at Nantasket Beach inside Paragon Park and outside, besides the $50 carried by the Red Dollar Sign Girl. There will also be hundreds of Paragon Park tickets.

After you have thoroughly read the thrilling romance on the buried treasure, take a look at this suggestive programme:

3 to 4 p. m.—Look in Paragon Park for the Girl with the Red Dollar Sign. (If you find her you will get $50 in gold.)

4 [illegible] p. m.—Look for a good looking young man wearing a straw hat and a negligee shirt near the flying swings in Paragon Park. Approach him and ask "Are you the man with the Red Dollar Sign? It belongs to me." He will hand you $10 in gold.

5 p. m.—Loiter around the flying swing in Paragon Park. Someone is liable to drop one of the Red Dollar envelopes. It will mean $10 for you if you find it.

7 p. m.—If the Girl with the Red Dollar ($50) Sign has not been caught, look out for her in Paragon Park again. Near the big gate entrance would be a good place to start the search at this time.

Now that ought to be enough information for any one. Every dollar of the $200 in Gold was found at Revere. You should find it all at Nantasket. Keep up the search. Most of the money at Revere was found in the latter part of the afternoon.

Dig in the sand, look in the grass, search among the bushes, circle about in Paragon Park and keep your eyes open. It is a Great Golden Chance!

HEART STOPS; LIFE IS SAVED BY BLAZING OIL

Man Stricken and in Flames Revived by Pain After Fall with Lamp off Ladder.

James A. Ryder, of No. 238 Highland avenue, Somerville, while standing on a ladder in the cellar of his house last night, with a lighted lamp in his hand, had an attack of heart trouble. He fell, and the burning oil from the broken lamp set fire to his clothing. The pain of the burns brought back consciousness and Ryder ran up stairs, where the flames were extinguished. He was seriously burned and was taken to the Somerville Hospital. There is little question but that he might have died of heart failure had not the shock of pain revived him.

PRAYED ON TRACK AS ENGINE WAS NEARING

Police and Railroad Men Save Man, Who Is Adjudged Insane.

Providence, R. I., July 13.—With arms raised and hands clasped, oblivious to his surroundings, John O'Donnell, of Fall River, was surprised on his knees in an attitude of earnest prayer on the tracks of the Warren & Bristol branch of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company just as a big freight locomotive was bearing down upon him. The police and several railroad men dragged him off the tracks before the pilot could touch him. O'Donnell was later adjudged of unsound mind and ordered committed to the State Hospital for the Insane.

The public school janitors in Malden have struck. Their disinclination to assist Charles W. The janitors say that they do enough work during the school term to be excused from work repairing furniture in the Summer time.

FOUR HURT, $40,000 LOSS, IN SERIES OF DISASTROUS BOSTON FIRES

Boy Thrown Against Live Wire in Serious Condition.

AGED MAN HIT BY ENGINE

Chief "Nat" Bunker of Cambridge Badly Cut by Flying Glass, Sent to Hospital.

ITALIAN WOMEN IN PANIC

Thick Smoke Clouds Alarm Hordes of Tenants in North End District.

FOUR persons injured, between $35,000 and $40,000 damage, a panic in a Lynn street tenement house, and the burning of $117 in real money at No. 81 Albany street were the features of four fires in Greater Boston yesterday.

The injured are:

William McGlinchey, ten years old, of No. 68 A street, South Boston, knocked against a live electric wire during a fire at No. 347 Congress street. In serious condition at the Emergency Hospital.

Franklin Mead, eighty-seven years old, of No. 33 M street, South Boston, knocked down by Engine 7 on Dorchester avenue extension, while the engine was going to the Congress street fire. Mead is at the Relief Hospital suffering from multiple injuries.

Lieutenant Caulfield of Ladder 19, cut over left cheek by falling glass at Congress street fire.

Chief "Nat" Bunker of Cambridge Fire Department, badly cut on arm by falling glass at Cambridge fire. Taken to Cambridge Relief Hospital.

Avert Gasolene Explosion.

The most serious fire was the one on Congress street in the establishment of the Columbia Counter Company. The loss was $25,000. Four alarms were sounded and once, when the firemen feared that a 200 gallon tank of gasolene would explode, the chief was on the verge of sending in a general alarm. But the work of the firemen averted the explosion.

The building, which is six stories high is occupied by the Counter Company, of which Edward Hood is president.

Young McGlinchey was pushed against the live wire when the police were shoving the crowd back of the fire lines.

The panic in the Lynn street tenement house was caused by dense smoke from a $200 blaze in the building at No. 55 and 57 Washington street (north).

Italian women and children became excited when the smoke filled their homes, and they dashed into the street shrieking and pleading with police to aid them in saving their furniture.

They were finally calmed, when they became convinced that there was no fire in their block, and no one was injured. The fire was confined to the basement of the Washington street building, occupied by the Ohio Motor Company.

Chief Bunker of Cambridge received his injury, a deep gash on his right arm, by glass falling on him during a $5,000 fire in the Eastern Expanded Metal Company's buildings at the foot of Sidney street, Cambridgeport. The fire started in a small wooden building and soon spread to the main building and the blacksmith shop [illegible] machinery was ruined.

Cigarette Burns Money.

Fire, which broke out on the second floor in the three-story brick building at No. 81 Albany street, owned by Thomas Doherty and occupied by Edward Gasien and family on the third floor, Simon Haddin and family on the second floor and Mrs. Mary George on the first floor, resulted in a loss of several hundred dollars.

The fire, which, it is said, was caused by a cigarette smouldering in a couch, started in a room on the second floor occupied by Alexius Hammertic. He started for work early in the day and locked up his room. He had $117 sewed up in the couch. Most of this money was in paper and was burned. Quite a sum in silver and pennies were scattered around the street when the firemen threw the blazing couch out of the window.

ROOSEVELT'S COUSIN FIGHTS FOR MILLION

Isaac C. Roosevelt, Camden Laborer, Contests Will of Late Consul at Brussels.

Camden, N. J., July 13.—Isaac C. Roosevelt of this city, who says he is a cousin of President Roosevelt, has decided to contest the will of George Roosevelt, a close relative, who was consul general at Brussels at the time of his death. The estate was left to the widow, Ida G. Roosevelt of Atlantic City. Isaac and his seven sons were cut off with a dollar each. He alleges that George Roosevelt's mother-in-law used undue influence when the will was made. Isaac, who is employed in a shipyard here at $2.50 a day, values the estate at a million dollars. The document will be offered for probate in New York Tuesday.

George Roosevelt lost a leg in one of the early battles of the Civil War. He entered the consular service in 1880 and served at St. Helena, Matanzas, Bordeaux and Brussels.

DOVES AND CARDINALS EACH SCORE SHUTOUT IN BIG DOUBLEHEADER

BY I. S. CLARK.

Two shutout games evenly divided between the Doves and the Cardinals was the result of the diamond tussle at the South End grounds yesterday before the biggest crowd which has gathered at the historic ball park since the opening day in 1900.

It was the Cardinals who first applied the kalsomine and they did an artistic job in the opening session by making the score 6 to 0. Then the Doves did a little fancy sketching themselves and brushed the second up by the score of 2 to 0.

It was an account of a couple of errors that each team [illegible] the other in the same afternoon, but it showed the superiority of the pitchers who did the work, and these were Ed Karger, who won for the Mound City Lads, and Gus Dorner, who swayed victory in the second meeting.

Had this couple of clever twirlers been opposed to each other it would have been an intense battle, as the results show.

It was strictly a pitchers' display, the total amount of hitting being nothing to brag of, though the Cardinals got together pretty well in the first argument.

Double Header Was Attraction.

It was only natural that such an attraction as a double-header should bring out the fans, and the grounds presented a picture which reminded old-timers of the days when there was only one team in the Hub and the big turnouts were always in evidence.

The crowd was only shy a few from being an even ten thousand, and there was not any seating space left when the games were started.

The stands and pavilion were jammed to their utmost capacity, while the fringe of humanity behind the centre field ropes was many feet deep. An emergency space was roped off near the grand stand, but this was not utilized.

And both games were the kind to enthuse over, but the real feeling did not get a chance to assert itself till the second game, as the first contest was a dead letter so far as the Doves were concerned.

Ed Karger, the southpaw who shut out the Giants, wound the Hub batters around his finger, and he had them mystified from the start. When the end of the game was in sight the Doves made a strenuous try to avoid being shut out entirely, but they were obliged to take their medicine and the only satisfaction the fans had was counting on the second clash and watching Karger act in the box.

Karger's pitching could hardly be improved upon, but the exhibition he gave did not surpass that of Dorner when the big German officiated.

Karger vs. Lindaman.

Against Karger was arrayed Lindaman, who got along all right outside of a couple of innings, but that was enough for the Cardinals, and they made enough runs to make the game doubly safe.

That the Doves are not easily dismayed over a dumping was evidenced when they trotted out for the second conflict and proceeded to even up matters. With Dorner going at his best and the team behind him playing errorless ball the combination was too much for McCloskey's men and only some wonderful fielding saved the visitors a worse defeat.

Stony McGlynn had the job with Dorner and was traveling at the same gait till the fateful seventh inning loomed up when his pitching got a few bumps, and with a slight break in the smooth playing of his teammates the Doves quickly fastened onto two runs, which settled the dispute finally.

Because of the outcome and the even way the teams were playing and the duel between the twirlers the second game was the most enjoyable from every point of view.

There was quickness and dispatch in the methods of both teams and Umpire Rigler kept the men moving, making the length of the game one of the shortest of the season.

Besides there developed some individual brilliancy on the part of the players which seemed to be heartily appreciated as the constant salvos of applause attested.

Burnett a Diamond Hero.

McCloskey's new one, Burnett, in centre field, got all the honors in acquitting himself for star plays and was hailed as a diamond hero before the game was over. He went after everything within a reach and took a couple of flies in the midst of the crowd which were marked safe, and the climax came when he pulled one down with one hand. Another prominent performance of his was taking a short low fly on the dead run, his speed being so great and running so close to the ground that he stumbled and rolled over his neck, but never let go of the ball.

At the outset of the second game the Doves got a man on second when Bridwell singled and Tenney walked, but the next three batters fell down.

Burke made second in the second round on a pass and a sacrifice, but was left there. Not a Dove reached first till the sixth, when Tenney connected with a single with one down. Then Burnett made his marvelous one-handed catch off Brain, and Tenney, who saw the ball go into the crowd, was on his way to third and was easily doubled.

In the seventh Beaumont slammed one into the crowd in centre and the ground rules gave him two bases. Bates worked a free pass and Burke filled the bases when he got away with a nice bunt towards short. Beaumont scored the first run of the day for the Doves on Ritchey's long fly and Bates got to third. Burke attempted to steal second and on the throw Bates ran for the plate. A sprint and a slide and he was safe. The ball went through Noonan and Burke went to third. Needham went out by fanning.

Only two of the Cardinals saw second. A fielder's choice and wild pitch put McGlynn on the middle cushion in the third and Murray hit into the crowd at centre which got him to the second notch in the diamond.

First Game One-Sided.

The first game was all one-sided in the scoring.

There was enough slamming in the second inning by the Cardinals to have made a bunch of runs, but they only got a couple.

With one down, Holly singled to right. Murray lifted the ball over the left fence for a homer, scoring Holly ahead of him.

Hoster made the second out, but Marshall rolled a slow one to Ritchey and beat it out. Karger was also safe on a tired roller toward Brain. Byrne batted a hot one at Brain, who knocked it down, and saw Marshall rounding the third corner. He got after Marshall, who was finally tagged out by Bridwell.

The biggest lot of runs was made in the fourth, when Murray got a two-bagger which Burke misjudged. Hostetter sacrificed, and Marshall got a lucky two-baser on the right foul line, scoring Murray.

Karger was the second out, but Byrne hit a nasty one at Brain, getting to first and scoring Marshall. Byrne stole second and scored on Barry's safe tap to right. Barry tried to make second, but a relay throw from Bates to Lindaman and to Bridwell nailed him.

The Doves did not show the least symptoms of scoring till the seventh, when Burke led off with a safety after Bates fanned [illegible] and went to second on Needham's drive over second. Then Lindaman grounded out.

It looked possible for runs in the eighth as the head of the list was up and Bridwell got to first on Hostetter's fumble. Tenney placed a nice Texas leaguer to center, but Brain was fanned, Beaumont popped out and Bates was an easy victim on strikes.

It was still more promising in the ninth to stave off a shut-out, as Burke, first up, banged out a single, Byrne stopping the ball back of third. Ritchey punched a single to left, but was forced at second by Needham, but Burke reached third. Brown batted for Lindaman, but hit into a double play, and there was nothing doing. The scores.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

Another doubleheader on Monday.

• • •

If they are as good as what was served up yesterday the fans won't kick.

• • •

Dave Brain did some fine work in the first inning of the first game when he retired the side on three throws to Tenney.

• • •

Twelve hits were made off Lindaman in the first six innings, but not a single came in the final three.

• • •

When Bridwell led off in the sixth inning the crowd got awake and rooted hard to start things going.

• • •

Barry got an easy two-sacker in the first game when he lifted a high one to Bates. Johnny lost it in the sun.

• • •

Lindaman did not care to take chances with Murray after knocking out a homer and a two-bagger and passed him.

• • •

Brain had some hot work cut out for him in the first game that kept Dave on the hop.

• • •

There's so many pretzel-like names in the Cardinals lineup that they had to be abbreviated to get on the score card.

• • •

Perhaps that sorrel top, Murray, didn't bat some. His bat had the true ring when the ball struck it.

• • •

That big Pole, Konetchy, reaches everything within a mile hurled at him and has promise for a youngster.

• • •

You won't see a catch like Burnett made every day. He stuck out one hand over the centre field crowd and took Brain's long fly. Tenney was down to third and easily doubled.

• • •

That circus catch by Burnett in centre off Dorner was a pippin. He turned a complete somersault but clung to the ball.

• • •

Gus Dorner pitched just six balls and got the side out in the fifth of the second clash.

• • •

There were no rain checks missing when the count-up was made, which had been given out the day before.

• • •

"Don't hit it to centre field," yelled a fan after Burnett had made some electrifying catches.

• • •

Frank Burke showed that he was no back number when he pinched a fly off the heads of the crowd.

PHILLIES WON IN TENTH.

Philadelphia, July 13.—It was championship baseball here to-day when the Chicago National League leaders and the Phillies engaged in a battle royal, the Phillies winning out in the tenth inning by 3 to 2, before 12,034 wildly excited fans. It had been a shut-out for the Phillies up to the eighth inning, when the score was tied. The Phillies used up three pitchers in their sensational victory. The score:

GETS 18 STRIKEOUTS.

The West Somervilles defeated the Cambridge A. A. of Cambridge yesterday afternoon by the score of 13 to 3. The feature of the game was the pitching of A. Russell for West Somerville, who fanned eighteen of the opposing batsmen.

HERE ARE THREE NEW DOVES.

Snooks is the Lafayette College star backstop. Outfielder Randall and Infielder Sweeney were procured from the Chicago Nationals.

Randall and Sweeney have been laid up with injuries, but Manager Tenney says they will prove comers when they get in trim again.

SHRUBB MADE GOOD TIME AT BROCKTON

English Runner Was the Feature of the "Pro" Athletic Games.

Brockton, July 13.—In the second set of games held by the Professional Athletic Association of New England, Alfred Shrubb, the much heralded English runner, gave a good exhibition of his powers this afternoon at Walkover Park. Shrubb was the main attraction at the games which was easily proved by the crowd present. The Englishman ran only in one event, the three-mile run, and defeated Tom Williams by 100 yards and Kanally by a little less than a lap. Considering the fact that Shrubb ran on a very poor track, eight laps to the mile, the time of 14 minutes 48 seconds is very good. Summary:

One hundred yard dash—Won by Keane, Boston; [illegible] second, Cameron, Pawtucket, third. Time—10 1-5s.

Four hundred forty yard run—Won by Tipple, Providence; Keane, Boston, second; Sullivan, Boston, third. Time—51 1-5s.

Eight hundred eighty yard run—Won by Sullivan, Boston; Doughty, Providence, second; Tipple, Providence, third. Time—2m. 4s.

One mile run—Won by Kanally, Boston; Doughty, Providence, second; Sullivan, Boston, third. Time—4m. 30s.

High jump with weights—Won by Guertin, Brockton; Karnaun, Norwood, second; Marsh, Boston, third, height 6ft. ½in.

Hop step and jump—Won by Guertin, Brockton; Cameron, Pawtucket, second; McTirnan, Quincy, third. Distance, 46ft. 10in.

Three-mile run—Won by Shrubb, Williams second; Kanally third. Time—14m. 48s.

HYDE PARKS SHUT OUT.

Plymouth, July 13.—The Plymouth Cordage nine defeated the strong Hyde Parks on the Cordage Grounds here to-day by the score of 3 to 0 in the best game ever seen on the home grounds. The features were the pitching of Johnson, the batting of Peck, Banker and W. Ford, the work of Tassinari at short for the home team, the playing of the visitors' outfield, which prevented several base hits by the Cordage team, and a phenomenal stop by Second Baseman Radford, the old league player. The work of both batteries was good. One thousand people saw the game. The score:

M'GRAW SAYS HE'LL QUIT GAME

Declares This Is His Last Year as Manager of the Giants.

New York, July 13.—John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, has admitted that the rumors circulated of late that he contemplated retiring from baseball are true.

"It is my intention to get out of the game at the end of the present year," said "Muggsy." "At least, out of major league ball. If I see the right thing I might be tempted to buy a minor league franchise, but otherwise I will retire from the game for good. I've had all of that I want from the standpoint of player and manager, and I'm ready to let somebody else take the reins of the New York club."

With the departure of McGraw, if he does leave the Giants, it is said there will be some radical changes in the personnel of the Polo Ground outfit. Just what these will be are not known, probably not even to Brush himself at this time, but there are several players on the team that it is expected will have to go to make room for younger men. Frank Bowerman, it is said, is one of the veterans slated for retirement, and so is Bill Dahlen and possibly Tommy Corcoran, whose work around second base has not been up to the standard McGraw expected from the old Red shortstop. Several changes in the pitching department are also planned, it is said.

SALEM 5; BEVERLY, 2.

Beverly, July 13.—The first in a series of seven game for the semi-professional championship of Essex county between Salem and Beverly was played on Peabody's Field here to-day, the visiting team winning by a score of 5 to 2. The features of the game were O'Toole's pitching, striking out ten men and two snappy double plays by Beverly. The score:

PILGRIMS EASY FOR NAPS IN FIFTH AND LAST GAME AT CLEVELAND, SCORE 8-1

Cleveland, July 13.—Winter, who had blanked the Naps twice this season, once with three hits and Wednesday with two hits, went back at them this afternoon, but met his Waterloo, 8 to 1. He himself is to blame for the defeat, although errors by Unglaub and Parent contributed largely to the disaster. Even eliminating the misplays, the Naps had the game 2 to 1, two triples and a fly at the outset accomplishing the desired result. Winter was hit safely only five times, but the brace of triples in the initial round and Flick's terrible triple with the bases occupied in the sixth, the result of two passes and Captain Unglaub's slip up did fierce execution and dissipated what chances the visitors had up to that doleful sixth inning.

Liebhardt, the "iron man of the South," was in fine shape and fanned every Bostonian except Shaw and Winter and Grimshaw, who had been injected into the fray in the final session in place of the former. His spitball was working in fine shape and but for his wildness in the ninth he would have blanketed the visitors with ease.

Ferris Beat Out a Slow One.

The Pilgrims went out in order in the first and fourth innings, Parent having fanned in the former and Unglaub in the latter. Two gone in the second, Ferris beat out a slow one toward third, but Knight struck out. Shaw walked in the third and Turner dropped Liebhardt's throw on Winter's attempted sacrifice. Barrett, though, fouled, Sullivan skied and Parent fouled.

Winter doubled to right in the fifth with two out, but Barrett was not equal to the occasion.

With one out in the sixth, Parent hit safely and stole, but Congalton flied, and after Unglaub had walked, Ferris grounded.

Winter got a life in the seventh on Turner's fumble after two had been retired, and stole, only to have Barrett strike.

With one out in the eighth Parent beat out a slow grounder and Congalton hit to centre. Unglaub's out advanced them, but Ferris skied.

Knight Springs Surprise.

Knight, who had fanned thrice, singled in the ninth and Shaw ambled. Grimshaw fouled out and Barrett fanned. A passed ball helped the runners along and Sullivan's hit to centre scored Knight. Parent walked, filling the bases again, but Congalton forced him.

Bay tripled to right in the opener and after Bradley had fanned scored on Turner's triple to left centre, Sullivan nearly nipping him as he slid into the bag. Flick's fly to right brought in the shortstop.

A pass and a balk in the second did no harm and the Naps went down in order until the sixth when Bay and Bradley walked and Unglaub fumbled Turner's easy grounder, filling the bases. Flick tripled to left, scoring three and came home himself when Parent made a high relay of Barrett's throw. The next three were retired easily.

Stovall doubled to left in the seventh and scored when Winter threw to left field in trying to catch him at third on Liebhardt's sacrifice. The pitcher reached second on the play, moved up on Bay's sacrifice and scored on Bradley's fly to left. Score.

Detroit, July 13.—With the score a tie and the bases filled, Donovan batted for Eubanks in Detroit's fourth, and his triple over Conroy's head virtually won the game for his side. He relieved Eubanks in the box and pitched effectively, though often and hard. Detroit knocked Newton out of the box for the second time during the series and hit Kitson hard through the remainder of the game. Score:

SENATORS LOSE TO SOX.

Chicago, July 13.—The White Sox took another slap at the Washington team today, defeating them for the third straight time, the score being 6 to 4. The Senators put up a good, stiff fight for a time and tied up the score in the fourth inning, but the Sox finally drove out some line hits in the seventh inning and put the game on the safe side. Ed Walsh was pitching for Chicago, and was strong except in one inning, when the Easterners banged him for four hits and three runs. Graham pitched for Washington, and seemed to have great curves and speed, but the Sox hit him hard at opportune times. The score.

St. Louis, Mo., July 13.—Philadelphia won the third straight game from St. Louis to-day, 2 to 1, in the tenth inning. Both pitchers were in fine fettle, but weakened a bit in the closing innings.

St. Louis made its first tally in the seventh on hits by Yeager and Hartzell and Nichols's error. The Athletics came right back and tied it up in the eighth on Seybold's hit and Yeager's throw to the stand. In the tenth, Davis's triple and Murphy's long fly to centre gave Philadelphia the winning run. Schreck was hit on the hand in the eighth inning and was forced to retire.

Mack Mack Is Driven Mile at Readville In 2:11 3-4, tor a New Track Record

By Edward E. Cogswell.

Five class races and the trotting gelding Mack Mack, driven by his owner, George Graves, to beat 2 12¼, was the programme decided at the matinee of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston at the Readville track yesterday

Although next to the pole the footing on the track was rather heavy, yet so perfect was the weather that the conditions could well be called excellent. Members of the club and spectators hugely enjoyed themselves by watching the sport from the spacious piazzas of the clubhouse and seated on the lawns

Three of the matinee drivers made their debut after an absence of several seasons from the natty racing wagons. The most notable was John Shepard, who in recent years has been content to sit and look on while C. H. Belledeu handled the ribbons over his horses.

Through the latter being in Maine, the dean of Boston road and matinee drivers, decided that he would do the honors himself behind the gelding Haynes. He jumped into a plaid suit that made his friends call him a "bonny Scotchman," and he looked the part.

Benjamin Pope was the second to accept anew the pleasure of driving in a race, taking the mount behind his, The Minute Man. George R. Hall, the recent benedict, rather surprised all by appearing behind Dividend, which likely denotes that he is to return to the sport in earnest Thought Graves Would Fail.

Graves gave a very pretty exhibition with Mack Mack. The trotter was accompanied by a runner hitched to a cart, and driven by Trainer Ed. Bither He was content to take the gelding away from the wire at moderate speed; in fact when the watches snapped the first quarter in only 35¼ seconds, many were heard to say that he would certainly fail in his attempt.

Going the next quarter he moved along considerably faster, however, covering the two furlongs in 32 seconds, making the half in 1:07¼ True and steadily he came from there to the wire, which he flashed under in 2:11¾ The time of the last three-quarters showed that it would be easy for him to trot right to his record of 2 08.

L. R. Peck had not a particle of trouble in winning with Remsen Robinson over Annabel W., and Alondra. The latter was not near up to the performance he put up a week ago.

It seemed as though Arnold Lawson was in bad with Milady O'Dreamwold against Lexington, as the easy style that Frank Hall run off with the opening heat apparently put the event on ice for him. In the next trip, though, a far different story was told. Lawson kept his mare hard at her work from the time Starting Judge C Dana Palmer gave the word The consequence was that the two raced head and head to the half in the fast time of 1 05¾, and on to the three-quarters in 1 39. It was evident that neither of the trotters was up to finishing the clip, and sure enough, Lexington had all he wanted just before entering the homestretch, Lawson jogging his mare home.

In the final heat Hall played different tactics. He trailed along as slow as possible to the upper turn, and then pulled the throttle wide open in an effort to beat Lawson from there in. It was nip and tuck, but Milady O'Dreamwold just landed by a nose.

Turned Tables on Lawson.

In the following event Hall turned the tables on Lawson, this time he having Cora Wilkes against Dreamwold Prioress In the two heats the latter made Cora Wilkes march off several quarters at a 2 08 gait, but it was not sufficient to gain the blue ribbon

In this race the judges ordered Hall to change his hat for a driving cap he had had for him, but was diffident to wear, after having carried it to the track for that purpose. The dictum from the officials caused a lot of hilarity at Hall's expense

But it was the victory of John Shepard that created a world of enthusiasm as in both heats when he dashed under the wire in the van with Haynes liberal applause greeted him. He drove the gelding, too, with the judgment that in years past characterized the man who made for himself the name of being the best road driver in this part of the country, either on the snow path or on the dirt.

George Hall with Dividend, and Benjamin Pope with The Minute Man, made a very interesting opening heat. Near the quarter the former went to a break, and after catching her Hall went after the flying leader. In this he nearly succeeded, but was a length to the bad at the finish. In the next couple of heats Dividend proved that she was master of the occasion by winning with some to spare.

Louise Taylor Withdrawn.

C. H. Traiser withdrew Louise Taylor from her race in order to work his more noted mare, Grace Kelar, 2 09¼, which he is getting ready to start in the matinees later on

Among the visitors was noted Everett L. Smith, the prominent turf writer from New York. He stated that the sport as put up by the club at Readville interested him greatly, and he was thinking of shortly locating in this city, when he might be in a position to participate in matinee racing himself.

It was announced that the next matinee of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston would be held on Wednesday, and continue that day in the week through the remainder of the season It was also given out the coming matinee would be for silver cups, as well as ribbons.

It was expected that with the change of date to Saturday Peter B. Bradley would be in attendance to start his King Clay and Peter B., but the race committee looked in vain for him yesterday. Summary:

Favorites All Beaten In Closing Day's Races at Woonsocket Meet

Special to the Boston American.

Woonsocket, July 13.—The talent was hit hard at to-day's races at the local trotting park, as none of the favorites landed It was the last day of the meet and brought to a close one of the most successful ever held in Woonsocket Race followers were treated to some fine sport

The 2 20 pace, the best of which was pulled off Thursday, was won by C H B and the best Manila Boy, the top heavy favorite, could do was to land second money, though a majority of the spectators saw him first by a neck in the third heat, and his owner, J H Wentworth, of Boston, felt he was unjustly treated by the decision when placed second

C H B won the first heat Thursday Copeland Girl won, C H B captured the next two heats, while Copeland Girl failed to show for the final heat, having had an attack of thumps and was withdrawn

A big crowd was present from Boston to back Lon Newbert's mare, Edith R, in the 2 20 pace, and they soon had her favorite over the field. She carried off the first two heats like she was all the candy, but then had shot her bolt, coming trailing in the third, while the fourth found her behind the [illegible] flag, though Newbert went out with the object of laying up the heat Guy F copped all the easy money by pacing off with the three final heats

Three Boston horses started in the 2 17 pace, Goldie Dillard, R. I Pepper and Checkers, and a good play made the former the choice. Frank Fox landed the tip first in the opening heat, but came to grief in the next by Dillard stumbling [illegible] and finished [illegible] was declared distanced, however, according to the rules.

The second was a [illegible] fight the entire route between R. I. Pepper and Checkers, and so close [illegible] finish that the judges were obliged to call it a dead heat

This effort settled the Dorchester Driving Club representative, Checkers, as Red Pepper, owned by W J Furbush, provided the gamest of the lot by annexing the last three heats, the final one five and a quarter seconds slower than the first in the race. Summary

Lanky Bob in Fine Fettle for Bout with Johnson

New York, July 13.—A dispatch from Dunellen, N. J., where Bob Fitzsimmons is training for his battle with Jack Johnson in Philadelphia on Ju— 17, tells of the hard work the former heavyweight champion is doing to get himself in shape.

The former champion has adopted a strenuous daily programme, and from outward appearances is in the best of health, and still possesses the punch that brought forth the solar plexus blow in his memorable fight with Jim Corbett at Carson City nine years ago

Fitz is up bright and early every morning. His first stunt is a seven-mile run, which he takes on the Plainfield roads at 5 o'clock After this daily jog he returns to his farm and takes it easy until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when he puts on the gloves and spars six rounds with Joe Rogers, the 200 pound heavyweight. After this active session he exercises in his gymnasium, and afterward a bath, which ends his day's work

Tom O'Rourke, of New York who brought George Dixon and other fighters to the front, visited Fitz yesterday O'Rourke watched the veteran work and after Fitz completed his set-to with Rogers the New Yorker gave an expert opinion of Fitz to the visiting newspaper men, which he summed up in the following words "Age hasn't taken any of Fitz's speed away and he is just as fast as ever"

Fitz himself says he is in good shape, and this claim was borne out in the slashing manner in which he went at Rogers.

Eddie Cutler, John L. Sullivan's old sparring partner, assisted Fitz in his work up to Thursday. Cutler didn't like the idea of being punched around in slambang fashion, so he took French leave. Fitz wired George Considine for another sparring partner and Rogers was sent along.

Fitz will remain at his farm until the afternoon of the fight, when he will take the train for Philadelphia accompanied by a crowd of local and Plainfield sports who stand ready to wager big sums on the [illegible] Fitz's training quarters is just now the Mecca for visitors for miles around and every day a throng of admiring Jerseymen from the rural districts call and watch him train Among his visitors yesterday were Dr. Miller and Hank Sutton of Lebanon Hunterdon County. The latter announced himself as an old-time supporter of Fitz saying that he won just $11 when Fitz [illegible] the championship and [illegible] of Jim Corbett at Carson City.

WALTHOUR WINS RACES AT REVERE

Bobby Walthour got a leg on the Boston American motor paced diamond medal last night at Revere when he scored the greatest number of points in the series of three heat races of five, ten and fifteen miles.

Walthour won the five and fifteen mile races and Moran the ten mile event. Moran gave Bobby a hot race in the final event and was only beaten out by about 25 yards. Walthour lost his pace and Moran made a big gain on him

The best Collins, the third rider in the races could do was to get second to Walthour in the first race of five miles.

Every heat was closely contested and kept the big crowd of fans worked up to a high pitch.

According to the way the men finished Walthour scored five points, Moran three and Collins one. The times for the distances were: Five miles, 7m. 17 2-5s.; ten miles, 14m. 48 4-5s.; fifteen miles, 18m. 24 2-5s.

In the mile lap race Tom Connolly won with Hilander second and Grant third. Connolly also won the five mile amateur open.

Accidents Mar Long Auto Race at Harlem Track

Chicago, July 13.—A series of accidents marked the closing hours of the twenty-four hours endurance auto race at the Harlem track which ended at 4:45 this afternoon in a victory for C. A. Coey, in a Thomas car who covered 846 miles Mongini, in a Matheson car, was second, with 842, and Wagoner in a Haynes, third, with 813 miles.

Gus Kabba, who had relieved Coey, was overcome by the strain on his eyesight and collapsed toward the close of the seventeenth hour. Coey relieved him. It was at first thought that Kabba had been seriously injured and rumors were current that he had lost his eyesight. Outside of his eyes being somewhat inflamed, however, Kabba was none the worst for his experience.

It was a desperate fight between the Matheson and Thomas cars up to within three hours before the race finished Mongini and his driving partner Buck, alternated every few minutes in their efforts to push the Matheson ahead of the Thomas car, and at the end of the twenty-first hour the two cars were on even terms. A few minutes later, however, the Matheson car met with an accident and the Thomas car then forged ahead and retained the lead to the finish

One feature of the race was the record made by C. W. Price in the Maxwell car. He stuck to the car from the start and the judges awarded him a prize for the longest individual drive.

SOUTH BOSTON BOYS WON.

The second game of the Holy Name series took place at Arlington yesterday afternoon and resulted in the swamping of the Arlington team.

DOCTORS TO MEET ON THE DIAMOND

Great rivalry has arisen between the doctors of Dorchester and Cambridge in regard to the knowledge of the national game of baseball, and things have come to such a pitch that Dr. John Ceconi of the Fields Corner section of Dorchester has issued a sweeping defy to the doctors of Cambridge, which they, by the way, only too gladly accepted, and it is now practically decided that the doctors of both suburbs will cross bats during old home week on the Dorchester Town Field, the losers having to pay for a bang up supper at some good hotel in the evening. In the line up of the Dorchester doctors are Captain John Ceconi Sammy Curran, both old Tufts College pitchers; Charles Mains. Thomas Maguire, Paul Kendricken, H. B Lang, W. C. Emery, Archie White and John Kelley On the Cambridge team are the following doctors: Captain P. J. Flemming, M. Whoriskey, C. P. Feeley, P Kelleher, J. Downey and F. Dwyer.

LITTLE RHODY WON RACE IN CLASS Q

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., July 13.—The second in the series of races for Manchester Club yachts was held to-day, two classes sailing, Class Q and the handicap class. C. F. Tillinghast's Little Rhody won the former and A. P. Loring's Secret the latter

The race was a seven-mile beat to windward and return. The first half of the return was a run before the wind, but owing to a shift in the direction of the wind the latter half of the return was a close reach

The Orestes was the first over the line, closely followed by the Eleanora, the other boats following closely together.

In the handicap class there were only three starters, and the Caramba withdrew without finishing owing to the lack of wind Summary

ILLINOIS AUTOISTS LIKE NEW LAW

The recently enacted motor vehicle law in Illinois is a welcome one to automobilists of that State. The cars must be numbered on the faces of the oil lamps in numerals at least one inch in height, with the letters "Ill" directly beneath, and a tag carried at the rear of the machine with figures four inches in height on a white background. The speed rates allowed are as follows: Twelve miles an hour in business districts of cities, fifteen miles in residence sections, six miles in rounding corners and twenty miles in the country The law makes it clear that no other motor vehicle license is required in the State

Cleveland, July 13.—Jerome D. He is Metropolitan champion [illegible], New Jersey champion and Long Island champion. This is the third championship he has won this season [illegible] every [illegible] competed for this year has [illegible]. He is the youngest [illegible] holder of [illegible] United States [illegible] being [illegible] twenty. He beat Graham six up and [illegible] to go at thirty-six holes, the same figures at which he yesterday put out Eben Byers at eighteen holes.

Five Bouts on Cards of Chelsea Club Tuesday

There will be an abundance of good boxing Tuesday night at the Winnisimmet Athletic Club in Chelsea, for every one of the five matches made is sure to be a hummer. The teams have been well selected and each should go the scheduled limit.

The main bout is between Kid Shea of Augusta, Me., who is known over in South Boston as Joey McGowan, and Kid [illegible] of Pawtucket, R. I. There is no difference in their weights, and so far as [illegible] is concerned there also is a striking similarity. They are [illegible] and should give an excellent [illegible] of themselves in the ten rounds in which they appear.

The directors were at a loss for a time as to which of the other [illegible] they would [illegible] out for the semi-final, but after considerable haggling they decided that Jerry Gaines, the market champion, and Charlie Hughey of Lowell would arouse the most enthusiasm on account of the fact that they are [illegible] and vigorous boxers. They are [illegible] to go six rounds, and some of the fastest boxing ever seen in the Chelsea [illegible] should materialize while they are within the ropes.

Kid Freeman of South Boston, who last week proved to his admirers that he is coming along fast, will face Charlie Dwyer of Cambridge in another six-round bout. They have already fought three hard draws, and their friends look forward to a smashing good engagement Tuesday night.

Bob Haggerty of Swampscott and Denny Ryan of Cambridge are to clash in a six-round essay. Haggerty is a pupil of Jimmy Briggs, and Ryan is a protégé of [illegible], which means that there will be something doing all the time, for Ryan [illegible] is a boxer that is devoid of [illegible] and [illegible] are ready to meet an adversary half way.

Another bout that should send the blood circulating through the arteries and veins of the members is that between Jimmy H[illegible] of the West End and [illegible], the Italian champion of the North End. [illegible] that he [illegible] and for more than two weeks he has been pursuing a diligent course of training for the bout. He has cut out canoeing [illegible] Apple Island and he [illegible] in the game before many months [illegible].

Thirty-four rounds of boxing are before the members, and the indications are that it will not be curtailed in any way, for the men are well paired and on equal terms in every way.

The [illegible] is growing fast and those who [illegible] applying for admission [illegible] take advantage of the opportunity before Monday [illegible].

[illegible] across the river [illegible] who forget their [illegible] to witness the bouts.

The first bout will be staged promptly at [illegible] and the others follow in quick succession.

Shrubb to Seek Records in St. Augustine Games

The programme of athletic sports offered at St. Augustine's athletic carnival on Saturday, July 20, will bring together an all-star aggregation of track and field experts from both the amateur and professional ranks.

Alfred Shrubb, whose remarkable running is the talk of all followers of distance running, will attempt to make a new American record at these games. He has not [illegible] determined on what distance he will make the try, but it will be either the two-mile or one-hour record. His performances in these events, which are the existing world's records, two miles in 9 min. 9 3-5 sec., and for the hour 11 miles 1137 yards, aroused the athletic world to the fact that Shrubb was the most wonderful runner who has ever lived.

The best professional runners in America will compete against him and will have big handicaps on him so as to pull him out all the way.

The management is trying to induce Tom Longboat to compete in either the amateur or professional running events. There is some doubt here as to whether the Indian is still in the amateur ranks, but as there are running events for professionals as well as amateurs at these sports the winner of the B. A. A. Marathon run can have the choice of either if he desires to accept the offers made him by the management. It is expected that he will come to some agreement with the [illegible] week.

An intercity relay race, each man to run a quarter mile, is being arranged between teams composed of New York runners and athletes from the Hub. Sheppard and Taylor are expected to run on the New York team and it will need a fast lot of quarter-milers to win from these crackajacks.

Entries will close Monday, July 15, with John F. Moakley, No. 68 Harbor View avenue, Winthrop Beach.

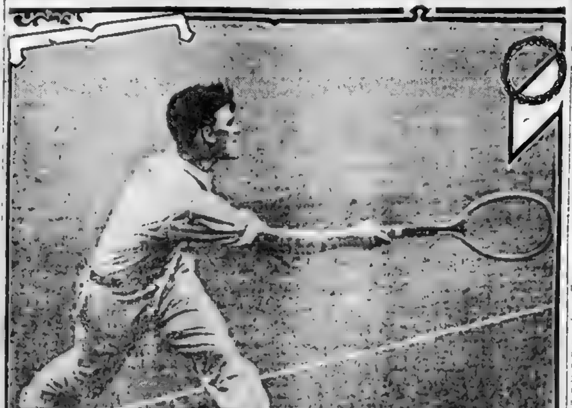
YANKEE TENNIS CUP CHASERS



KARL BEHR

BEALS WRIGHT

WRIGHT AND BEHR BOTH BEATEN IN FIRST MATCHES FOR CUP.

London, July 13.—American chances for lifting the Dwight Davis tennis cup this year are going glimmering as a result of two [illegible] defeats administered by the Australian team to-day in the preliminary rounds. Beals C. Wright lost to Norman Brookes in straight sets by 6—4 and 6—2. Karl Behr did better, taking two sets against A. F. Wilding before finally being defeated in 1—6, 6—3, 3—6, 7—5 and 6—3.

The Americans still have a chance to win the preliminary round which would make them the challenging team for the cup, but their chances are not regarded as promising. The Australians now have two of the three points required to win the round to their credit. To win, Behr and Wright must take the next three games.

The [illegible] was played at Wimbledon [illegible] great crowd of [illegible] weather conditions.

Brookes's excellent playing was the feature of the first match. He used the style of service which was introduced into England by Wright in 1904, and beat the American badly at his own game.

Wright admitted he was outplayed, saying: "Brookes outplayed me. He has im[illegible] and played [illegible]. He is a splendid [illegible]."

Behr Started Well.

Behr in his first set with Wilding played all around his rival, taking it in 6—1. Then Wilding rallied and took the next set. Behr retaliated, capturing the third set. In the next set he seemed a winner, but Wilding drove him to deuce, and then won out. The last set was Wilding's easily.

Make a Gymnasium of Your Chum

By Julian Hawthorne.

ANCIENT Greece bred the best all-round athletes—the most symmetrical men. Yet they had no gymnasiums which, in completeness of fittings, compare with our own; we possess a separate machine—almost—for every muscle in the body. Indeed, their gymnastic appliances were of the most primitive description; a discus, a bar or two, perhaps, and some weights to test strength. Thanks to their climate, they were able to take all their exercise outdoors; and without doubt, most of it was done without the aid of any apparatus whatever. They were great runners and leapers; for the rest, their main training probably depended upon personal contests with bodily contact, such as wrestling in various forms, boxing, and so on. In other words, they used the arms, legs and bodies of one another instead of dumbbells, trapeze, parallel bars, pulley-weights, and the other machines wherewith we encumber the floors, walls and ceilings of our temples of Hercules.

JAPANESE FOLLOW GREEK METHODS.

The Japanese, the modern athlete nation, follow the same principle; they have, so far as I am aware, no gymnasiums in our sense of the word at all. They are strong and evenly developed, and very quick and skilful in the practical application of their strength, as any one who has seen their jiu-jitsu practice knows. Neither Greeks nor Japanese show any of those abnormal developments of particular muscles or parts of the body that are so common with us, and, in my opinion, so regrettable. Health, in athletics, should be even more our aim than strength; and health can never be attained by excessive and distorted muscles in one place, and only moderate or deficient ones in another. Such excesses put the whole body out of plumb, hygienically and otherwise.

Wrestling is one of our best exercises; but it is in a degree spoiled by the limitations imposed by its rules; the range of movements is too narrow. I prefer the almost boundless variety furnished by the jiu-jitsu, the principle of which is that every muscle shall be strengthened and trained by opposition against other muscles, either of the man's own, or of his antagonist in the game. Muscles thus developed are not large and rigid, but smooth and flexible, and the general bodily power is great; and it is impossible for a man thus trained to be other than symmetrical. Health is likewise assured; and what more does a man want?

BENEFICIAL EXERCISE FOR CHUMS.

Now, every boy has a chum, and most grown men have one; why not use him as a gymnasium instead of bothering with a lot of machines? I don't ask you to learn jiu-jitsu—probably you would not have the needed patience—but you can invent forms of contest for yourselves. Get into bodily contact with each other, push and pull and tumble about to your heart's content for half an hour or so every day; don't be rough, and keep your tempers. You will be astonished at the progress in strength and beauty that you will make; and the great number of movements which you must inevitably make affecting the abdomen as well as the lungs and heart will soon make such a difference for the better in your digestion and other organic functions as will quadruple your enjoyment of life.

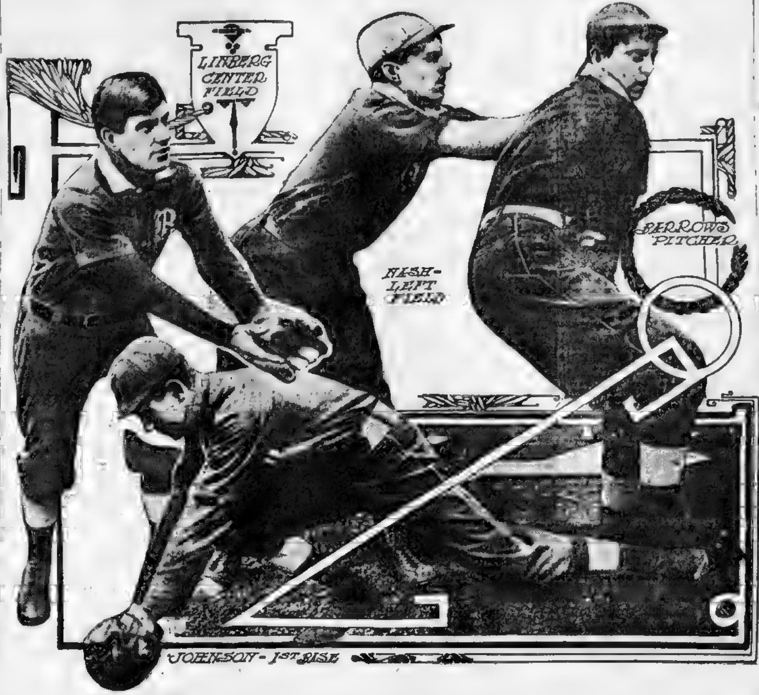
4 MATTAPAN BASEBALL CLUB STAR PLAYERS



Just at present the Mattapan team is playing great ball, as their victory over the strong Allston Union team will show. The team is fighting hard for the lead in the Boston Suburban League, and each player on the team is confident that Mattapan will be on top at the finish.

The team is managed and captained by Frank W. Johnson, the organizer of the league, and a good schedule has been arranged. Atlantic, Saugus, Merrymounts and St. Margarets are among the outside teams which will be played. Atlantic defeated Mattapan early in the season by a 4 to 3 score, and a close game is looked for when the two teams meet again. Games were scheduled with Plymouth Cordage Company, North Woburn, Ipswich and Saugus, but rain interfered. The team is made up of the following players, some of whom are ineligible for league games: Catchers, Hirshon, Sullivan and McDonald; pitchers, Barrows, Terry, Leaver and Byrnes; infielders, Johnson, Hammarie, K. Nash, Richardson and Todd; outfielders R. Nash, Linberg and Desmond. Of these players the two Nashes, Hammarie and Linberg formerly played on the Glenvales, Todd and McDonald on the Glendale A. C., Terry, Richardson, Byrnes and Johnson on the Boylstons, Barrows, Sullivan and Desmond on the Norfolks; Hirshon formerly played on the Roxbury High team. Following is the schedule: July 27, Atlantic at Atlantic; August 3, St. Margarets at Brockton; August 10, Merrymounts at Wollaston; August 17, North Dorchester (place undecided); August 24, Saugus at Saugus; August 31, Glendale A. C. at Franklin Field; September 2, Bowdoins at Franklin Field; September 7, open; September 14, Groveland A. A. at Franklin Field.

PROVIDENCE SPLITS WITH BUFFALO TEAM

Providence, July 13.—Buffalo won the first game of to-day's double-header through disastrous errors of the home team, and the locals easily won the second.

The Grays apparently had the game on ice up to the seventh inning, the score at that time standing 4 to 1. In that inning two singles and a man hit with a pitched ball filled the bases with one out. Schrim hit to Crawford, who tossed to McConnell, forcing Nattress. That player, although out by a rod, ran into McConnell full force, knocking him nearly senseless.

The collision occurred just as the Providence second baseman was about to throw to first. The ball went wild and two men scored. Abstein let the next drive go through him and another counted. In the ninth with one out, Nattress walked and took second on a passed ball and scored on Schrim's hit. A passed ball put him on third and he scored on a dumb play by Abstein.

Providence made a rally in the ninth and got one run over and two on the bases, but the side was retired without further scoring.

Providence outplayed the visitors at every point in the second game. Green went into the box for the Bisons, and for four innings was invincible. In the fifth and sixth a succession of safe hits, including a home run drive to centre by Abstein, sent in six runs. Mack pitched grand ball, the Buffalos finding him for eight scattered hits only, two of which came in the same inning. Providence fielded sharply, winding up the game with a brilliant double play, Abstein closing it with a one-handed catch of McConnell's wide thrown ball. Attendance 8,250. The scores:

ATTLEBORO 2, N. ATTLEBORO 0.

Attleboro won the third game of the series from North Attleboro yesterday afternoon by the score of 2 to 0. It was a pitcher's battle between Howard and Johnson, the former having the better of the argument. Barny Reddin, the third baseman for Attleboro, wrenched his knee in the fourth inning and had to leave the game. The series now stands 2 to 1 in favor of North Attleboro. The score:

Marblehead, July 13.—The fleet of the Boston Yacht Club arrived here this evening. They left the clubhouse at South Boston about 2 P. During the evening the clubhouse was brilliantly illuminated and a band concert enlivened the occasion. In conjunction with the shore illuminations the fleet displayed Japanese lanterns and red fire.

AUTO DRIVERS ADVISED TO CHANGE SPEED ON GRADES; TIPS FOR HILL CLIMBERS

In order thoroughly to inform the members of the organization as to just what sort of a task their cars perform when they climb hills the technical committee of the Long Island Automobile Club of Brooklyn recently issued the following 'chat' on hill climbing through its chairman, Louis T. Weiss: "One of the great feats which are credited to most every car by its owner is, 'She'll take any hill within most any radius, on high.' It is certainly necessary for a car to get over any hill on the road, and it is no [illegible] a pleasure to surmount it on high, but whether it is advisable to do so is a question answered in some cases immediately by the breaking or straining of one of the parts, or later by the poor condition of all the parts of the mechanism.

"The most important factor in climbing hills fast certainly is in having enough motive power in proportion to the weight of the car which it propels. It does not follow, however, that a high-powered car can climb hills on the 'high' as easily as a light runabout with a good deal less motive or horsepower, first, on account of the difference in weight to be dragged, and mainly on account of the relation of the speed of the motor to the driving wheels. High-powered cars are generally geared [illegible] This is done so as to be able to run fast on the level without speeding the motor excessively. The average relation of gearing is about three to one on the 'high' on cars having twenty to forty-five-horsepower. In cars of thirty to thirty-five-horsepower we find the average 'high' gear to be about two and one-half to one. Still higher-powered cars, say from fifty to sixty horsepower, have a ratio which is often less than two to one, and racing machines are generally geared one to one on 'high.'

Average Ratios.

"We speak of these ratios as the average, but there are many high powered cars with lower gear ratios when built for special uses or when they are air cooled. When, for example, the ratio three to one is spoken of it means that the motor shaft turns three times in order to turn the driving wheel once. When figuring the ratio or speed of our motor when travelling a certain mileage per hour we must necessarily consider the size of the driving wheels, because when a car mounted on thirty-four inch drivers has a ratio of three to one its motor runs slower than one of a car mounted on thirty-two inch drivers with a three to one gear, both making the same speed.

"Let us consider what the ratio of gearing has to do with hill climbing abilities of automobiles. The explosions in the cylinder behind the pistons are really pushing the car up the hill. When the motor is allowed to run fast while the car goes slow the explosions occur often, the flywheel will keep on a continuous, uniform speed and the car will mount easily and without jerking. When, however, the motor turns over slowly, the fly wheel not being heavy enough to advance the car steadily between the intervals of the explosions, the car will jerk at each explosion and all driving and power transmitting parts will be under a strain for which they were really not designed. While they may stand it, they will certainly not last as long as [illegible] when used carefully.

"To impress the importance of this subject on your minds and make it clear, we will figure just how far one explosion in one of the cylinders of a four-cycle, four-cylinder motor geared at two to one ratio must push a car mounted on thirty-four inch drivers, and at the same time how many revolutions, or at what speed per minute, the motor runs when making sixty miles an hour. A mile being 5,280 feet and the circumference of a thirty-four inch wheel being approximately nine feet, it takes about 587 revolutions of the wheel to cover one mile. The motor must then make twice 587 revolutions, or 1,174 revolutions per minute when you run a mile-a-minute clip. In this car equipped with a four-cycle, four-cylinder motor each cylinder has one explosion while the crank shaft turns twice, and we get four, multiplied by 587 or 2,348 impulses on the motor shaft in one mile, which figures about two feet and three inches of travel of the car to each explosion.

Tremendous Strain.

"Now supposing we negotiate a hill with 33 1-3 per cent. grade, which means one foot rise in three feet advance. If we ascend it with the car aforementioned each explosion in the small cylinder of perhaps [illegible]eter, and on a crank of two and three quarters to two and one-half inches length, must push the car with all its weight and against all the friction two feet and three inches ahead, and consequently raise it one-third of that distance, which is nine inches. Consider what a tremendous strain there must be on all power transmitting parts, especially when going slow, for then the flywheel at the speed it turns is not heavy enough to carry the car steadily ahead and upward.

"Your committee is not desirous of appearing in an advisory capacity as to how to run cars up or down hills, but simply wishes to call your attention to such matters as may be of interest. However, we do believe it to be advisable to climb hills on the lower speeds. In speaking of the ratios of the change gears allow us to give a simple way of easily obtaining them on any car. They can also be figured, but it requires counting teeth on wheels, sprockets or bevel gears, which are very often inclosed and sometimes hard to get at and always full of grease.

"An easy and sure way is as follows: Engage the clutch and the gears of which the ratios are to be determined. Mark the driving wheel at its lowest point and the floor with chalk. Also mark the flywheel so as to be able to count its revolutions. Then push the car, counting the revolutions on the flywheel until the chalk mark on the driving wheel is again at its lowest point. The ratio will be the number of turns of the flywheel to one of the driving wheel. If, for example, the flywheel has turned two and one-quarter times the ratio is two and one-quarter to one. Measuring the distance between the chalk marks on the floor in feet and dividing it into 5,280 will give the number of turns the driving wheels make in one mile. Multiplying this quotient by the number of turns made by the flywheel will give the number of revolutions the motor makes in one mile."

GOTHAM AUTO SHOW WILL OPEN OCT. 24

Palace Exhibition to Be Followed by One in the Garden.

Announcement is made by the Automobile Club of America of the date of its eighth annual automobile show, to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York. The affair will open on the evening of Thursday, October 24, and continue until the following Thursday, October 31. This will result in practically a two-weeks' automobile show in New York, as two days following the club show the exhibit of the A. L. A. M. will open in Madison Square Garden.

It was agreed by the Exhibition Committee of the Automobile Club that the last week in October was rather early for an automobile show; but trade conditions have materially changed and a canvass of the various manufacturers showed that they would all be ready for the eighth annual show of the club. The Exhibition Committee, in order to provide a time when all automobile interests would be centred in New York, declared in favor of the October date, and this idea was supported by the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association and the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers, Incorporated, who as usual are participants in the club show.

It will also be noted that the dates selected are close to the time for the holding of the Vanderbilt Cup race, when all New York will be interested in motoring. The new clubhouse of the Automobile Club of America will be in full swing at that time, and it is expected that the club will have its annual banquet on the closing day of the show.

By special arrangements with the Grand Central Palace Company, the club has been able to secure considerable more space in the Palace, which will enable exhibitors to more properly show their products than in the past. An entirely new scheme of decorations is being outlined, announcement of which will be made when the space application blanks and other literature are issued.

CORBIN IN FRONT IN MANY TESTS

Has Made Favorable Showings in All Events Entered This Season.

The Corbin Motor Vehicle Corporation of New Britain, Ct., the manufacturers of the "full jeweled" Corbin car, feel much pleased with the showing which their 24-horsepower cars have been making in the different events in which they have been entered this season. It is the first season that they have gone in for this sort of thing and the results are materially very satisfying.

In the Readville race, their car stood for third place until one of their rear tires came entirely off the wheel at the end of the forty-fifth lap, each lap being made without a variation of five seconds, at an average clip of forty-two miles an hour.

In the New Jersey endurance run, for three consecutive days, both cars entered came through with perfect scores.

In the Wilkesbarry, Pa., hill climb their car won first in its class. In the New York Albany endurance run the Corbin car came in first with the least number of points against it, making a remarkable showing. In the four days' sealed bonnet contest in New York, the three cars entered came through with perfect scores.

In the Lowell races of July 4, in the three races entered, they won one first, two seconds and a third, the [illegible] in the mile race making the remarkable time for a 24-horsepower car of sixty-three seconds.

In the Bay State Automobile Club endurance run of July 6, a Corbin car started number one and was first in at all the controls, following closely the route card. In this run they also carried off a perfect score.

LAMPER'S LONG TOUR IN THE MOUNTAINS

J. A. Lamper of Boston, well known as an enthusiastic motorist, completed a 1,000-mile tour through the White and Green Mountains, with a Peerless touring car last week and was so enthusiastic over his success that he made preparations to start out again on a long ramble from Boston to Halifax and a tour through Nova Scotia.

On the recently completed tour he went as far north as Quebecom, Canada, and returning made an unusual climb over the Hoosac Mountain.

The tourist and his friends left his home at Lynn, Mass., on June 8, and reached the Mount Pleasant House, after an eight-hour run over the hills of Vermont. From there he drove to Barton, Vt., to Stanstead, Quebec; to Barton Landing, to Bellows Falls, to Woodstock and to Manchester, Vt.; to North Adams, Mass., and thence by the mountain route to Boston.

Mr. Lamper holds the five-mile beach record made in Florida last year with a thirty-horsepower Peerless.

FRAYER-MILLER RACERS.

Those who are complaining that the long delay in announcing the course and conditions of the Vanderbilt cup race will deprive this country of proper representation in this classic event because the manufacturers have been discouraged from building cars, seem to forget that there are several racing cars available in this country at the present writing. The three 150-horsepower Frayer-Miller racers which competed last year and the two Locomobile racing cars [illegible] days' work to be ready to start in a race.

Consistent Driving Alone Prevents Many Accidents

One of the most interesting experiences on the first day of the Glidden tour, from Cleveland to Toledo, is that related by the occupants of the Motor Age Press Car.

This car, a Packard "Thirty" of the 1908 model, carrying E. Rolph Estep, David Beecroft, and driven by Tom Fetch of Transcontinental fame, started last at 8.40, in order to carry E. L. Ferguson, the official starter. Hence it was able to run up the line and witness all the incidents on the road. Most of the traveling was hard on all the cars on account of the rutty and sandy character of the road, which created an incessant hammering on the cars.

Mr. Estep said after the run that he thought the only thing which prevented a greater number of serious accidents was the consistent driving of the tourists. There was little racing, and it was well there was no more, because speed scrimmages on the narrow, dust laden road would have spelled disaster. The Packard stuck to a steady pace, with a stop of half an hour at Norwalk to accept the luncheon hospitality offered by Colonel Sprague to all the tourists. However it arrived at the Boody House just twenty minutes before the checking in of the first regular contestant. While this car was a non-contestant, there are three Packards in the tour, all of them being owned and driven by private individuals, respectively, Messrs. Clark of Chicago, Perkins of Pittsburg, and Buse of Buffalo.

ROGER GORHAM IS ON WELCH CAR

Roger Gorham, seventeen years old, son of Charles Gorham, assessor of Great Barrington, is in the Glidden run as second observer of the Welch car. Gorham got the place because of his good work during the New York Motor Club run from New York to Albany, when he was on a Welch car that left Great Barrington seventh and finished at Albany first.

FRENCH AUTO EXPORTS HEAVY

The French exports of automobiles during the first four months of the current year were valued at 52,000,000 francs, or 5,000,000 francs more than for the same period last year. Parisian dealers are said to complain of poor business, however, and to ascribe the cause to the unhealthy condition of the stock markets in London and New York.

CRAIG-TOLEDO CAR WHICH MADE PERFECT SCORE IN B. S. A. A. RUN

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Buffum of Brookline are in front seat and W. Harris Latham in rear seat. Mr. Buffum is naturally much pleased with the showing of his car in the endurance run.

ONLY ONE SHOW IN WINDY CITY

National Association of Auto Manufacturers Will Have Charge of Exhibition.

There will be only one automobile show at Chicago this year, and that will be under the auspices of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers.

Although the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association did not receive the recognition which it considered fair to its members in exhibiting at the Chicago show, the committee having the matter in charge felt that rather than disturb the trade conditions at the present time, by making a move which might not be beneficial to the industry, the present conditions should be supported. Besides, there was a decided lack of interest on the part of manufacturers in connection with the Chicago show, only twenty-three out of forty-five members of the American Association taking space. Big manufacturers like Ford, Buick, Pennsylvania and the American Mors, did not apply.

Moreover, the Goddess of Chance seemed to favor American Association members in the drawing, for, with few exceptions, they all secured excellent space. This, combined with the feeling that an independent show at Chicago this year might not be best for the automobile trade as a whole, has resulted in the announcement that the A. M. C. M. A. would work in harmony with the N. A. A. M. in the promotion of the affair in Chicago this December.

Working with the Chicago Automobile Club arrangements for an independent show in Chicago for 1908 are now under way.

June proved to be another victorious [illegible] American makers so far as the imports and exports are concerned. The American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association is in receipt of figures from the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington, which shows a decrease in May importations and an increase in exports of automobiles over the corresponding month last year.

During the May of 1906, there were imported 117 foreign cars, while only 105 were received here during May of this year. The United Kingdom, France and Germany all show a shrinkage in exports. On the other hand, during May, 1907, there were exported from America $82,528 worth, against $75,000 in May, 1906. During the past eleven months, ending with May, the total exports amounted to $594,161 against $577,250 for the corresponding eleven months in 1906.

WHITE STEAMER LANDED HONORS

Won Quaker Club Run, Ten Mile Race, and Had Perfect Endurance Score.

The three important contests held during the first week of July, resulted in a fine trio of victories for the White steamer. A model "H" twenty-horsepower White won the regularity run conducted by the Quaker City Motor Club on July 3rd. The White was the only car of the forty-five which competed, to make a perfect score. The winning White was the only car of this make entered.

On the other side of the continent, namely, at the race meet held at Santa Rosa, California, on July 4, the model "G" thirty-horsepower White steamer added to its reputation for speed. Carrying a regular body and with full equipment, the White won the ten-mile race for cars of thirty-five horsepower and under in 12.54; won the twenty-five mile free-for-all in 29.07 and as the first car starting from scratch to finish in the ten mile handicap. The best mile was made in 1:02.

Two days previous to the race meet, another demonstration of White reliability was given when the model "G" thirty-horsepower White made a perfect score in the 185-mile endurance run from Los Angeles to Lakeside. The car carried seven passengers, with baggage, and made the trip through an unusually mountainous country on a fuel consumption of less than nineteen gallons.

WON IN TENTH INNING.

The Malden White Sox defeated the Library Bureau of Boston on the athletic field, Malden, yesterday afternoon in a fast contest by a score of 2 to 1, it taking ten innings to decide the winner. Harrington and Keady both pitched fine ball, the former allowing but one hit and striking out six men. Keady was touched up for nine hits, but kept them well scattered. [illegible] scored the winning run in the tenth with no one out, reaching second on an error by Mather, going to third on Horne's hit and stealing home. White [illegible] with King at the plate and strained a ligament in his leg. He was carried to the dressing room and was attended by Dr. F. J. Plummer. Macurda of the visitors was struck in the leg by a ball, the member swelling to twice its natural size and he was also attended by Dr. Plummer, but managed to finish the game. The score:

Brockton Team Escapes Shutout, Getting One Run in Last Inning

Worcester, July 13.—Brockton narrowly escaped a shut out in this afternoon's game with Worcester on Boulevard Park, making the lone tally with two down in the ninth inning. The final score was Worcester, 4; Brockton, 1.

It was a pitchers' battle, with Frock having the better of the argument throughout. Cutting pitched in good form, but his support was lax. Frock gave five free passes and fanned four, while Cutting passed three and struck out as many. Frock was particularly effective when the bases were occupied. Score:

LAKEWOOD COURSE MAY BE CHOSEN FOR THE BIG CUP RACE.

High Speed May Be Maintained Without Danger to Spectators or Drivers.

New York, July 13.—Despite the claims of Senator Morgan that the Plainfield-Westfield course would be selected for the Vanderbilt cup race, which is to be held in New Jersey, it is more than likely that another course, near Lakewood, will be chosen. Information has been received which is apparently authentic, which indicates that the section around Lakewood is very favorable for the running of the race.

It is well understood that those interested in the race favor a course not too near New York and, in fact, not near any centre thickly inhabited.

The Lakewood course runs from Lakewood to West Point Pleasant, Manasquan, Sea Girt, Allaire and return to Lakewood, and is probably one of the best courses that can be picked out in the southern part of New Jersey. A comparison with any of the courses over which the Vanderbilt race has been run shows this course is far superior, both in quality and the width of the roads and in the small number of danger points.

From Lakewood to West Point Pleasant the distance of 8.8 miles is as wide at every point as at the Jericho turnpike, with only two turns where it will be necessary to slow down. From Manasquan and Sea Girt to Spring Lake the three or four short turns can be easily straightened. The course from Sea Girt to Five Points passes the estate of Arthur Brisbane, and for a distance of nearly eight miles is practically a straight road. For half a mile it is a little rough, but this is practically the only part of the road which is not perfect.

From the turn at Alair's Corner into Lakewood, a distance of 6.2 miles, the road is absolutely straight.

Part of the proposed course passes the large estates of John D. Rockefeller and Arthur Brisbane, both of whom it is understood are in favor of the race near their property.

On the three straightaways, aggregating twenty-three miles, very high speed can be attained without the slightest danger to spectators or drivers, as the road is wide enough at any place to allow three cars abreast. The entire course measures 28.7 miles.

LONG TRIP ON WINTONS.

Four Winton cars driven by Messrs. Blakeslee, Gates, Kel and Brown have just completed a 700-mile run from Cleveland to Watkins Glens, N. Y. The trip was thoroughly delightful, being barren of accidents or mishaps. Mr. Blakeslee joined the tour at the end of an eastern trip of 1,000 miles, during which his 1904 Winton proved itself equal to any of the best cars of recent production.

A. A. A. TOUR NOW A FURIOUS RACE, DANGEROUS TO CONTESTANTS.

Time Schedule So Exacting as to Make Fast Work Positively Necessary.

SERIOUS ACCIDENTS LIKELY

BY J. C. KERRISON.

Chicago, July 13.—The American Automobile Association tour of 1907, combining as it does the contest for the Glidden and the Hower trophies, must already take rank as the most exacting and demanding contest of its kind ever held in this country. Although only three days have as yet been spent on the roads, the tourists in the main have become more or less disgusted and are now figuring where they are at.

A year ago it was elimination that was called for. This year there has so far been elimination with great regularity and success. Some twenty of the cars have received penalizations during the first three days of [illegible], and at present clean cards are wondering when they will get theirs.

Contest Not a Tour.

It is a hard, bitter contest, for contest it surely is although dignified by the name of tour. A year ago one was permitted to do all sorts of work on his car and received no penalization therefore, he being penalized only for lateness of arrival at controls. There is no reconstructing machines this year, unless the machine should have carried and declared the part used before the start of the tour.

No one car started out with a complete set of parts, but each confined himself to springs, bearings and such things as one would commonly break on the average tours. No new magnetoes or propeller shafts, crank shafts and parts of such character were carried, hence the machines that meet with accidents in that manner might just as well withdraw from the contest as continue. Should a single thing not declared in the inventory filed with the board be used for repairs, no matter how slight that may have been, the car is disqualified. Naturally enough one will withdraw rather than suffer a disqualification.

By this means a winning club will surely be determined before the run concludes. Something like eight clubs started in the tour for the Glidden cup, and all but two, the Buffalo and Pittsburg, have received penalizations, and in the majority of cases cars have withdrawn from teams. In fact, every team save the two mentioned have had retirements, and it is believed only a question of time when one of those clubs will have a car dropping out of the contest owing to the inability to replace certain things from the stock carried at the start of the tour.

Made a Road Racer.

The present tour will unquestionably do more toward the final abandonment of the Glidden trophy tour, as now conducted, than did the tour of last year. The running time for every day is most damaging and should a machine encounter tire difficulties it will perforce have to travel at top speed in order to regain the time lost and arrive at the night control on time. The time limit for every day save yesterday was such as to make the tour develop into a veritable road race, and that too despite the fact that in the original conditions it was distinctly stated that a car would not be forced to race or attempt such speed as would not be indulged in on an ordinary tour; in other words there would be no occasion for racing, and the committee emphatically stated that racing would be the cause for instant disqualification.

Still under the time schedule as now being carried out, racing is not only encouraged but is really made an absolute necessity in order that cars may arrive at control on time. It has been fast, furious work, so much so that the majority of women who started at Cleveland retired from the tour at Chicago. Should the time schedule be as exacting in the future as it was in the first two days of the run there is bound to be some serious accident, and the chairman of the touring committee, who seems to be the all powerful man this year, will have himself to blame for administering a black eye, if nothing else, to tours as conducted by the American Automobile Association.

The Chicago Automobile Club, one of the strongest organizations in the country, feels keenly the slight placed on it by the Napoleonic chairman, in declining to accept for the use of himself and officials of the run the quarters reserved for them at the local club house.

Hardest Yet to Come.

Great work is expected from the different cars in the next seven days. They have before them the hardest part of the trip, that from Columbus to Pittsburg, and thence to Buffalo. Those who participated in the New York-Pittsburg run of some four years ago have vivid recollections of the experiences of mountain climbing and coasting. They are looking forward to a thorough elimination. It will surely come. The roads between the points specified are said to be the worst ever, but how they can rival the course between Toledo and South Bend is beyond comprehension. That stretch called forth not only every ounce of ability from the different machines, but likewise the finest degree of control and ability possessed by the different operators.

The climb over the mountain will result in some interesting developments, and with the firm belief that they will need the very best brakes in the descent of the same, the men are now saving these brakes to the utmost. It is hardly possible that any of the men have new sets of brakebands in their cars and once without these important parts a car is rather a dangerous proposition to handle at speed. So far, or to be precise during the first two days of the run, the cars were at times sent along at their top speed. No car can be sent along at that rate day after day and expect to be able to stand up under the most severe test. It is bound to weaken sooner or later, and if there is a clean score car left at the end of the run the experts will be lacking in their predictions.

In a Class by Itself.

The only Glidden tour which has ever been as demanding as is the one now in progress was the Pittsburg run of four years ago, when it rained constantly and but a few cars reached the night's control and exactly a baker's dozen arrived at Pittsburg.

It is impossible to say as to which particular car is making the best showing in the run. All cars are doing excellently considering the road and schedule conditions. The cars comprising the two leading clubs are unquestionably doing great work, and it would not be at all surprising if the Buffalo team, whose members are all driving Pierce cars, should again capture the trophy. This club now holds possession of the Glidden and is certainly making a strong bid for the same. Its members are determined to win out, and are driving accordingly.

There is just one weak spot in the Pittsburg team. It is not the machine, but rather the driver, who is weak. This man drives in the hardest manner possible, taking no more care of his car than a man does of the butt end of a cigar. He bangs it over hills and down dale, and no cars made will stand the use, or rather the abuse, it is receiving for any length of time.

The Westchester team, which at one time looked like a promising claimant for the trophy, went up against it by one of its cars going into a ditch and having to be repaired with material not on the car, and so it goes all down the line.

Tyler Driving Well.

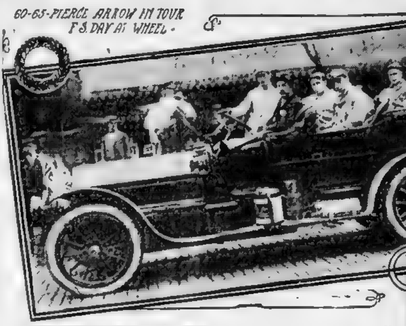
The only Boston man who is in the run as a contestant is Lucius Tyler, who is driving a Maxwell, and driving it with ability and care. He attempts no racing, but is satisfied to plug right along at a steady, even pace and arrive at each night's control on time.

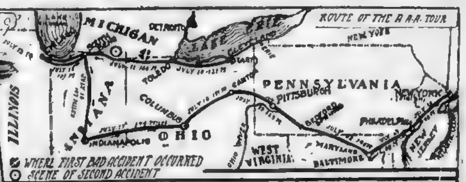
The team of Thomas cars is doing excellent work, the Sixty showing up particularly strong; in fact, she is doing as good work as any other car in the run, and has yet to receive a penalization.

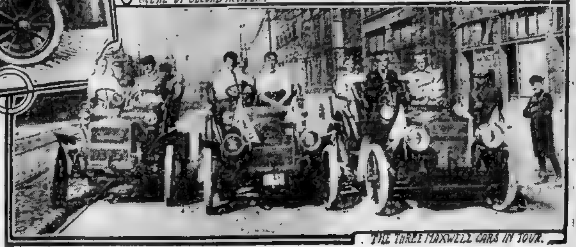
The competition for the Hower trophy is particularly keen, quite a number of cars now being tied for first honors. Archie Hughes, of Providence, who is driving a Pierce six runabout, and with whom is Treasurer Harry W. Knights, of the Bay State Automobile Association, is looked upon as a possible winner. He is doing great work and has yet to receive his first point of penalization.

The tourists who are now in this city are enjoying themselves most thoroughly. They are truly appreciative of the two days of rest and likewise of the hospitality being shown them by the local motorists.

ROUTE OF THE A. A. A. TOUR AND SOME OF CONTESTANTS







THE THREE MAXWELL CARS IN TOUR.

The car at the left is I. C. Kirkham's, No. 41, and is a 16-20-horsepower Maxwell. This is the same car that competed and made such a wonderful showing in the first Glidden tour in 1905. L. S. Tyler, driving a 10-horsepower 1907 Model H Maxwell, is in the centre. His car is No. 58. Charles A. Fleming is at the right with a 24-horsepower 1908 four-cylinder Maxwell. His car is No. 59.

London Paper Praises New Thomas Co. Designer

Much as English motoring publications show their fear of an invasion by American automobile manufacturers, they do not hesitate to give makers on this side of the water credit where credit is due. The most recent instance of this is the following, taken from Motoring Illustrated, published in London:

"When an American starts manufacturing, whether it be cars or alarm clocks, he looks around to find the most experienced and capable designer in the line. When unearthed, he approaches him with an offer which the man cannot afford to ignore, and his services are promptly bought and transferred to the new field. The system is perhaps brutal, but it is good business all the time, and if some of our English makers of cars were to realize the important bearing which intelligent design has upon ultimate results, they would be more ready to offer such terms to a designer as would tempt the very best man in the business. A cheaply paid designer produces cheap designs, and cheap designs are generally nasty designs, which sooner or later lead the firm making use of them to Carey street."

"An instance of American enterprise in securing at any cost the very best material available is furnished by the announcement that the E. R. Thomas company of Buffalo, U. S. A., has just appointed M. Gustave Chedru as its head designer. There is, perhaps, no one in the automobile industry who has had a wider experience of car designing than M. Chedru. Eighteen years ago he began his designing work in the service of the Continental Edison company, subsequently joining the Compagnie Electrique Thery. In later years he held the positions of chief designer for the de Dion Bouton company, chief engineer in the Richard Brasier factory and superintendent of the Clement-Bayard company. M. Chedru designed the cars which twice won the Gordon Bennett Cup race. Before associating himself with the Thomas company, M. Chedru was technical manager and consulting engineer to the Societe des Automobiles Thery."

POPE-HARTFORDS GOT MANY PRIZES

Out of a total of five events of a hill climb held at Salt Lake City, Utah, two Pope-Hartford Model L touring cars, fully equipped, secured three firsts, four seconds and two thirds. The Pope-Hartfords were entered in every event where price permitted, and won first and second places in the three, four and five thousand dollar touring car classes. In all twenty-six cars were entered for the five events, their horsepower ranging from twenty to sixty, and selling price from $2,500 to $6,000. In two events where runabouts, listing at $3,000 and under, were entered, the touring cars suffered defeat, a $4,500 runabout winning both events, although second and third places were secured by the Pope machines.

The hill climb was one and a half miles long, had an average grade of fifteen per cent and many sharp turns.

Samuel Newhouse, multi-millionaire and called the Carnegie of Salt Lake City, drove in one of the events, his $4,500 runabout making the best time of the day.

HARD TEST FOR ELECTRIC AUTO

That at least one make of electric automobile when operated on its lowest speed is capable of covering about twice the mileage on a single battery charge than when operated on its high speed, has been proven by exhaustive experiments recently conducted by the Studebaker Bros. Manufacturing Co. at South Bend, Ind. The tests lasted for several days, and the car used was a Studebaker victoria phaeton, weighing with full equipment 2,400 pounds, and having been in daily use for six months.

In the first test the car was operated on its lowest speed over a two-mile course and ran for twenty-four hours before exhausting the battery charge, during which time it traveled 134 miles. After recharging the batteries the car started off again this time on its second speed, and ran for fifteen hours, covering 133 miles. On the third speed it traveled 101 miles in eight hours, and on the fourth test when operated on its high speed it covered eighty-two miles in six hours.

This model of Studebaker electric is rated to cover forty miles in each battery charge, and in this test it delivered 100 per cent more mileage than its rating on the high speed and from 150 to 235 per cent. more than its rating on the lower speeds.

AUTO TRUCKS FOR BAGGAGE MEN

It is extremely interesting to note what a complete reversion to the type of self-propelled vehicles originally brought out in this country has taken place within the last few years, says the Automobile. Pioneer builders found so very little material available to their needs that it was only natural that existing forms should have been impressed, and a horseless carriage that was true to its name should have been the result. Its shortcomings were painfully apparent, even to its own builders, despite which they clung to it tenaciously. Foreign designers pointed the way to progress, and it was not until the buggy was abandoned that a real advance was brought about, and that along totally new lines. One or possibly two American makers still cling to it, but for all practical purposes its existence has been ended as completely as that of the high bicycle when it was superseded by the low two-wheeler.

Unfortunately the automobile, as we know it to-day, does not lend itself to production at a figure within the reach of a very large part of the population, and even though obtainable at a greatly reduced initial cost, its maintenance is a tax of too burdensome a nature for the many. This led to the revival of what one maker has aptly termed the "buggyabout" a few years ago, and this light, easily handled and cheaply kept vehicle bids fair to become a tremendous factor in the American automobile industry. With its small power plant, few parts and easily understood mechanism it is simplicity itself, and that it is capable of covering long distance at a minimum cost is evident from the recent performance of one of these high wheeled horseless carriages, which covered 200 miles under most adverse conditions of road and weather on eight gallons of gasoline and three pints of lubricating oil. The agricultural population is in pressing need of a quicker and better means of transportation, and there is little doubt that this American type of automobile represents the solution that will be availed of in thousands of instances.

To facilitate the work of removing heavy loads of baggage and mail sacks from through trains at stations where short stops are made, as well as to lighten the labor of the baggage handlers one of the railroads has adopted a number of electrically driven baggage trucks. The outward appearance of the latter is the same as that of the standard truck, and it is somewhat startling to see one man apparently hauling a ten-foot stack of trunks as if it were a child's wagon he was dragging. Closer inspection reveals the secret, as what appears to be a drag rod is used only for steering and turning the current on and off, for which purpose it carries a plug on the end. These trucks have been in operation for several months.

SHANKS WON'T QUIT.

A rumor in the East to the effect that Charles B. Shanks had resigned as general sales manager of the Winton Motor Carriage Company came as news to both the Winton company and Mr. Shanks. Nothing to it.

PUMP DRIVE MAY CAUSE TROUBLE

One of the most annoying difficulties which may befall the circulating system of a water cooled car arises from the stopping of the pump drive. Most frequently when this happens it is caused through the shearing of the key which compels the motor to turn with the driving shaft. This may come through the clogging of the motor with dirt or sediment from the water, from imperfectly cleaned jackets, in which a certain amount of core sand has been permitted to remain, or through the heating and sticking of one of the bearings. The immediate result, of course, is the heating of the motor through the evaporation of water in the jackets while the water in the radiator is left cool. At the same time the pump driving pulley or gear is found to be turning in the usual way. In case no immediate remedy for the primary difficulty can be improvised on the spot, the rotor may be removed from the pump casing and the car run slowly with natural or thermo-syphon circulation. As the piping is usually too small to afford sufficient cooling on this basis for ordinary running, however, it will be found necessary to handle the machine with extreme caution for the time being.

Talks on Teeth

By G. GORDON MARTIN
(INCORPORATED)

You Must Have Teeth

A man must have teeth.

He can go through life minus arms, legs, eyes, ears, hair or any other portion of his anatomy and live, but he must have teeth, or he will die.

Teeth prepare the fuel for the human engine—and if this fuel is thrown into the fire box, which in this case is the stomach, without preparation and without being ground up—then it is going to put the fire out.

You must have teeth.

When a man or woman is so unfortunate as to lose nearly all his or her teeth because of disease or poor dentistry, it is time to listen to what we have to say.

Delays are dangerous.

If the stomach is abused, it will not stand the abuse very long.

Then comes the worst of all troubles—dyspepsia.

When a man's stomach goes back on him, he has lost his best friend. He deserves pity. The whole trouble in nine cases out of ten is that he has not been masticating his food—because he has lost his teeth. There are dark days ahead of him.

You must have teeth!

Now for the bright side of the picture.

By the Alveolar Method we can supply real teeth in place of those that are lost—and put them in your mouth so they will act and feel like nature's teeth. We won't bore into the gums or hurt you. The work is practically painless. It can only be obtained in our offices in Chicago, New York, Boston and Kansas City. We own the patents on the process for this country and six of the foreign countries.

We mention this because other dentists, jealous of the marvelous growth of this business, claim to be able to restore teeth by the Alveolar method.

Fight shy of these substitutes. They can't deliver the goods.

This business has grown from a small beginning to the present commanding position of the largest dental concern in the world—all in four years—because we have made good in the ten thousand cases that have come to us, and our business is increasing month by month. More offices must soon be added to the chain.

Men must have teeth!

If you have lost nearly all of your teeth, or are a victim of pyorrhea, and are threatened with the loss of all the rest, we have a great message for you.

We can supply those you have lost with the Alveolar Method and cure the cause of the loose teeth—pyorrhea.

Will you investigate this, now, before you get to a point where we can't help you?

If you can come to one of our offices, we will examine your teeth without charge. If you can't come now, do the next best thing, send for our free book, "Alveolar Dentistry"—which explains the method in detail.

This is the most valuable book on the teeth ever written, and it is yours for the asking.

Send for it today. That is the first step to take in order to get good teeth.

Our charges are moderate—no higher than other first-class dentists would ask for the simpler forms of dentistry—because of the enormous volume of business done by us in our four offices.

We straighten teeth, cure loose teeth and tighten them—fill and crown teeth, and all such work is done by experts. Alveolar dentistry calls for expert operators.

You may as well be in expert hands—if the prices are equal.

Don't put this off. Write today. When teeth begin to go, they go fast.

Don't be a "Plate victim"—when it is not necessary.

Send for the book or come and see us.

FACES DEATH FOR KILLING FARWELL

Robert McGraw To-Morrow Goes on Trial for His Life in Superior Court.

CLAIMS SELF-DEFENCE

By Eleanor Ames.

The trial of Robert McGraw, charged with the murder of Benjamin Frank Farwell, which begins to-morrow morning in the Superior Criminal Court, will tell a [illegible] story of a mother's tireless devotion and absorbing love, worthy of the pen of the greatest novelist or playwright.

Benjamin Farwell was the sole comfort and companion of a widowed mother who had lavished a life time of care and devotion upon him.

He was a man of deep feeling, much intelligence and good education. His hobby was inventing. For a time before his death he had been in the employ of the American Steam Gauge & Valve Company, where McGraw, a colored man, was a [illegible] watchman. On the night of the murder McGraw declared that he had killed Farwell in self defence, supposing [illegible] a burglar.

Mother Causes Trial.

After he had killed the man he dragged him face downward for some distance, and then called up the police and stated he had shot a man.

Twice he was brought before the Grand Jury and a report of no bill was made.

The case might have been dropped then and there, had it not been for the grief-stricken mother of Benjamin Farwell, whose heart cried first for vengeance, then for [illegible].

From the first moment that she learned of his death, Mrs. Isabelle Farwell believed her son had been foully murdered.

When the attitude of the District Attorney's office seemed to incline to the dropping of the case, Mrs. Farwell determined to take matters into her own hands.

Traced Her Son's Steps.

Armed with her son's photograph she started forth to trace his steps on the fateful night on which he met his death.

It involved miles of weary travel, hours of weary waiting, midnight vigils and [illegible] search.

It was a work that only a heartbroken mother would have had the courage to begin or the strength to pursue.

Finally McGraw was again brought before the grand jury, being arrested at the apartment house in Cambridge, where he was employed as janitor. He was held without bail on a charge of murder in the first degree.

I spent an hour with Mrs. Farwell yesterday in her home, No. 30 Templeton street, Ashmont.

She had just returned from consultation with court officials in town and her entire thought was of the coming trial.

Pleads for Justice.

"All I want is justice, justice, justice," she said. "Once, at the very first, I thought it was vengeance, but that was a wrong thought. It is only justice. This man McGraw has taken from me my all, my only son, and all I ask is justice. I never want any one else to suffer as I have suffered."

Mrs. Farwell is a remarkable woman.

Perhaps she is sixty years old, but she has the strength and courage and determination of a strong woman of half that age.

Her figure is slender, her height medium. She has gray hair, worn pompadour, kindly gray eyes which gaze at you steadily through gold-rimmed spectacles, and a straight mouth indicating, more than any other feature, great firmness.

"I Lived For Frank."

"I have talked with her more than once, but I have never seen her hysterical, tearful or given to extravagance of words.

She is a woman whose balance is so near the center that anything toward which she directs her energy and attention is worthy of consideration.

"I would give more," she said to me, "for the love of my child five minutes than for the whole rest of the world."

She spoke with deep tones and slow speech.

"That may sound foolish," she resumed after a moment's hesitation, "but I mean it every word of it. Frank was my all. I lived for him. He loved me absorbingly, entirely. And he has been taken from me, and I want justice. I must have justice."

Mrs. Farwell disclaims having done anything very wonderful in bringing her son's slayer to trial.

Praises for Moran.

"It is not my doing," she declares. "I have helped, but my work alone would have done no good.

"Give the praise to John B. Moran, the grandest man in Boston, and to Sergeant O'Neil and the men of Station 10. That's where the praise belongs.

"Why, I have done only what any woman with a mother's heart would have done.

"If I had done less, I would not be worthy being the mother of such a son."

She closed her eyes and leaned her head back in her chair, and underneath the fine skin the muscles twitched and the veins swelled in forehead and hands.

"That's it," she said finally. "If you want to praise any one, praise Frank. No mother ever had such a son. He was a young man of worth. He was a friend to every one. Read these." She thrust a bundle of letters toward me.

Letters of Comfort.

They were notes of sympathy and comfort. They said: "Frank was the last person in the world to look for trouble of any kind."

"Frank was one son in a hundred. My heart goes out to you."

"Frank was the grandest young man I ever met."

The letters were from men and women, white and colored.

Friends of McGraw offered to help.

One old lady, Mrs. Bates of Roxbury, in her eighty-eighth year, wrote a remarkable letter of comfort and sympathy. "I have known you from your girlhood, Belle," she wrote, "and you have now, as ever, my love and thought."

These, and hundreds like them, have for two years and a half kept Mrs. Farwell at work, unmindful of the passing of time, and ever helpful.

McGettrick Handles Case.

To-morrow she will see her work come to fruition.

The trial will be held before Judge Fessenden and Judge White.

Assistant District Attorney McGettrick will represent the State and E. F. Benjamin will defend McGraw.

A special venire of 100 men has been summoned.

The case will [illegible] most of the week, and the most interested spectator will be Mrs. Isabelle Farwell, a mother fighting for justice for her murdered son.

CAMBRIDGE SUBWAY FIGHT IS NOW UP TO RAILROAD BOARD

To Give Public Hearings to Determine Number of Stations in University City.

The fight of the people of Cambridge for four stations in the new subway to be built from Park Square, Boston, to Harvard Square, Cambridge, will be carried to the Railroad Commissioners. At public hearings, which will be granted by the commissioners, the citizens will plead that the plans of the Boston Elevated Company for two stations be rejected. The decision of the Railroad Commissioners is final.

The plans of the Elevated Company are now before the Railroad Commissioners. They [illegible] the disapproval of Mayor Wardwell of Cambridge, who, in accordance with the wishes, as he believes, of a majority of the citizens of his city, favors four stations, [illegible] the terminal at Harvard square, one at Kendall square, one [illegible] Portland street, one at Central square and one near Dana street.

Two Monster Petitions.

The subway fight in Cambridge has been a bitter battle of orators and petition. A Citizens' Committee bearing 10,000 signatures and headed by ex-Mayor Augustine J. Daly will fight for four stations, one at Harvard square, Dana street, Central square and one east of Columbia street. A Business Men's Committee, having a petition signed by 5,000 men, will urge three stations for the University City. They say that if there are more than three stations the number of surface cars will be greatly reduced, and that the business [illegible] will suffer thereby. The three station [illegible] eliminates Dana street from the list of stations.

The Boston Elevated Railway Company is willing to give Cambridge but two stations, a terminal at Harvard square and a station at Cambridgeport on Massachusetts avenue, between Pearl and Brookline streets. There are a few satisfied with the two stations, but they are decidedly in the minority.

Weathy Petitioners.

A handful of wealthy property owners are insisting on a station at Dana street, but [illegible] general. The district, it seems, which most needs a station is the section east of Columbia street, called the Lower Port. Here are several big factories, the total number of whose employes is many thousands. This district and these people have been entirely disregarded by the "L."

The battle before the Railroad Commissioners will be a long one. There will be a bitter fight to prevent the sacrifice of the request of thousands of factory workers for a handful of wealthy property owners who seek a station at Dana street, which will give the valuation of their property a big increase.

MILITIA OF RHODE ISLAND WINS GLORY

Newport, R. I., July 13.—With a battle between Fort Adams and Fort Preble in which the State militia and the regulars participated, the mimic war game which has been going on here for a week came to an end at 12 o'clock tonight.

For an hour cannon roared and search lights flashed. Theoretically, more blood was shed than in the war between the United States and Spain.

The militia regiments covered themselves with glory, and regular officers say that had the battle been real they would have overcome any enemy, so well planned were their aggressive and defensive tactics.

In tonight's battle the attack came from Fort Preble and Fort Adams was on the defensive.

The militia will to-morrow attend mass, which will be said by the Rev. Patrick J. Sullivan, chaplain of the Second Regiment, and then the citizen soldiers will start for home, the First Regiment for Newport and the Second Regiment for Providence.

[illegible] the manoeuvres have been a success in every sense of the word in the opinion of both regular and militia officers.

They have proven that Rhode Island can depend upon her soldiers to defend her in case of war.

FT. HEATH GUNNERS BREAK RECORD OF WORLD AS MARKSMEN.

Make Six Hits in Three Minutes and Forty Seconds at 6,000 Yards.

USED DISAPPEARING GUNS

Strike Target Being Towed at Rate of Five Miles an Hour.

FORT BANKS' FINE TOTAL

Massachusetts Militia to Join Regulars in Coast Defence Exercises.

THE world's record in coast defence gunnery has been broken at Fort Heath, Winthrop, by United States coast artillery men.

During the week there has been gun practice at Fort Heath and shooting from the mortar pits at Fort Banks. At Fort Banks the mortar gunners did pretty well, making a fine total.

But at Fort Heath the men of the Seventy-eighth United States Coast Artillery, Captain Hase commanding, broke the record, not only for all coast artillery marksmanship of this country, but, it is claimed, of any other country.

The gunners fired the twelve-inch disappearing guns so rapidly and accurately that they made six hits in three minutes and forty seconds on a target 6,000 yards away, towed at the rate of five miles per hour. That is a net rate, as gunners estimate it, of nine-tenths of a hit per gun per minute.

Beats Former Record Slightly.

The former record was six hits in four minutes, a net rate of four-fifths of a hit per gun per minute. The margin between nine-tenths of a hit per minute and four-fifths of a hit per minute is small, but is sufficient to give the record of the world to the men of the Seventy-eighth and to the Fort Heath guns.

The guns were throwing a 1,000 pound projectile, loaded with 260 pounds of smokeless powder.

This remarkable gunnery took place last Tuesday. Report of the net result was given out last night.

Last Thursday the 89th Coast Artillery, Captain Grant, fired nineteen shots from twelve-inch mortars at Fort Banks and made eight hits at a target 6,000 yards away. This is excellent work, but it is not a record.

Exercises for Militia.

Captain H. D. Todd, Jr., commanding officer at Fort Banks, said last night:

"We shall have exercises in camp here from July 22 to 27 for the militia. The coast artillery will be joined by the Massachusetts artillery and by the [illegible] Regiment, M. V. M. The exercises will be for the purposes of training the State troops to assist Federal troops in defence of the sea coast in case of war."

J. Pierpont Morgan Is Star Witness in London Court Suit

American Multi-Millionaire Swears He Never Gave Woman Defendant Investment Tips.

London, July 13.—American millionaires are catching the "testifying habit." Following the appearance of John D. Rockefeller in court a week ago, J. Pierpont Morgan to-day was a witness in a London Criminal Court.

Morgan was called to testify against Mrs. Josephine Leslie, who is alleged to have operated somewhat extensively in relieving the credulous of surplus cash by playing upon an alleged friendship with Morgan, claiming that the American financier furnished her with investment "tips."

Morgan was the star witness against Mrs. Leslie. He not only denied ever giving her the information she said she received from him, but declared he had never seen or heard of the woman.

Mrs. Leslie had been cutting a wide swath in England up to the time of her arrest at Newmarket last week, and for this reason her case attracted great attention. She lived at the best hotels, spent money lavishly and took extensive and expensive motor trips.

The complainant against her is Miss Annie Blount, an Irish heiress, who charges Mrs. Leslie with getting $42,500 of her money on false pretences.

According to the Irish woman Mrs. Leslie told her how Morgan had given her tips which enabled her to accumulate a fortune. She offered to share the tips with Miss Blount and the latter advanced the $42,500.

Miss Blount's attorney charged that Mrs. Leslie gave his client two checks afterward, one for $125,000 and another for $100,000, as the profits of the investments. When they were presented they were returned marked "Account closed."

RICHEST MAN IN GREAT NORTHWEST SUCCUMBS

Helena, Mont., July 13.—After having been unconscious for two days, Peter Larson, the richest man in the Northwest, with the possible exception of W. A. Clark, is dead after an illness extending over two years. Cirrhosis of the liver was the cause. Larson was about fifty-six years old. He was a native of Denmark and came to America when twenty years old. He amassed a large fortune at railroad contracting, mining, lumbering and other Northwestern industries. He leaves a widow and a daughter. His fortune is estimated at from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. He was a noted yet unostentatious philanthropist.

PROMINENT ELKS WHO CARRY BEAN POTS TO PHILADELPHIA TO-NIGHT

PATRICK F. O'KEEFE

JAMES H. WALSH

HUB ELKS HOPE TO GET QUAKER PRIZE

Will Wear Pilgrim Costumes and Carry Bean Pots in Philadelphia Parade.

Five hundred Elks—to say nothing of Peggie—leave Boston to-night for Philadelphia. They will wear Pilgrim costumes and carry bean pots to indicate whence they come.

Many of the Elks will be accompanied by their wives, making quite a delegation to represent Boston and New England at the twenty-first annual convention of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks which begins in the Quaker City to-morrow. Mayor John F. Fitz[illegible] will be one of the delegates.

"Peggie," it might be explained, is Martin Sullivan's Boston terrier. She is the official mascot of Boston Lodge of Elks and you can't lose her. This was already proven. For, on her return from the Elks' convention in Denver last year, [illegible] inadvertently [illegible] off the baggage car of the Elks' special [illegible] Kansas. But she was found, [illegible] safe, and was shipped along to catch up with the train. She arrived back in Boston as right as a trivet, as though falling off in Kansas or any other old state was nothing to her, simply nothing.

20,000 Will Parade.

Among those going is Major Patrick O'Keefe of Boston Lodge. He is bound to go. For he's the esquire of Boston Lodge and, as such, is entitled and expected to lead the Boston Lodge delegation in the monster Elks parade which is to be a feature of the Philadelphia reunion. Dispatches from Philadelphia say that 20,000 Elks are expected to take part in the parade. The chief marshal of the whole line will be Grand Esquire Colonel John P. Sullivan of New Orleans Lodge, who is six feet and three inches tall, as befits a chief marshal.

But it is expected that the Boston Elks will show up pretty well, even in this big gathering. There is a first prize offered of $500 for the most unique costumes in line. The local boys think that the Pilgrim clothes and the time-honored Boston Baked Bean Pots will make the judges sit up and take some notice. The Bostonians will also take along the famous Salem Cadet Band, under Jean Missaud's leadership. Between the beanpots and the band, the Pilgrim garb and Peggy, the Boston Elks hope to bring home some of the $5,000 total of prize money which is up for competition.

Hub Elks Off To-night.

The local delegation will parade to-night before leaving Boston. Leaving the lodge building of Boston Elks on Hayward place at 5 p. m., they will march to the South Station to board the 6:30 boat train for Providence. There they will take the New York boat. They are due in Philadelphia at noon to-morrow. Headquarters for the Boston party in Philadelphia will be at the Windsor and Majestic Hotels.

Guilty! Says Miss Brennan; Innocent! Voices Mrs. Pyne

WOMAN STAMPS AS FALSE GIRL'S STORY

Scorns Threats and Laughs at Attempts to Cajole Her.

WORCESTER, July 13.—Facing Mrs. Josephine Pyne in the Lily Pond Hotel to-day, and accusing her of having buried the weapon with which Charles L. Burnap was shot through the heart, Miss Mary Brennan, who had been arrested and released under bail in connection with the crime, created one of the most sensational scenes that has taken place since the Lake Quinsigamond tragedy startled this section of the State.

Mrs. Pyne, a handsome woman, is the central figure in the remarkable case. She acted as housekeeper for Frank W. Phipps, who is locked up on the charge of murdering Burnap. The wife of Phipps, living with her son and daughter at Attleboro, blame Mrs. Pyne for breaking up her home.

Miss Brennan accompanied the officers who have been working on the case to the Lily Pond House, where Mrs. Payne said the detectives tried to intimidate her and force her to declare that Phipps had fired the fatal [illegible].

This is her story as it was related to a reporter of the Boston Sunday American.

By Mrs. Josephine Pyne.

The police have tried to put me through a third degree in connection with this tragedy and have threatened me with arrest and imprisonment if I failed to testify against Mr. Phipps.

I went to see my sister in Milford yesterday and returned to the Lily Pond House [illegible] afternoon. When I got to the house I found Detectives Murray and Molt there. Constables Bartlett and Moran, Patrolman Hickey and Mary Brennan were there also.

Miss Maud Morse, the other girl employed in the house, was there, too. Detective Molt began on me. He said: "Come now, you know who fired the shots [illegible] you know that Phipps fired six shots. Tell the truth and save yourself trouble."

"Oh, [illegible]," I replied, "I don't know anything of the kind. I do not know that Phipps fired six shots for [illegible]."

"See [illegible]," Molt [illegible] at me, "you [illegible] [illegible] Burnap's [illegible] and have [illegible] Phipps. It may mean ten or twenty years for you."

Gives Girl the Lie.

"Do your worst," I cried. "I do not care if I get forty years, and you can't make me lie to help you out."

Then they asked me about the revolver. They declared that I knew where it was hid. "I don't know anything about any revolver," I told them.

Mary Brennan then broke in. "You know, Jo, you took the revolver and [illegible] back of the barn. You used a pickaxe to dig up the ground."

"That's a lie, Mary Brennan," I told her. "You're in a nice business telling such things."

Then Molt walked toward Mr. Phipps's roll top desk. He began playing with a couple of bullets. He looked at me significantly and asked: "Do you see these bullets?" I told him that I did, but that I knew nothing about them.

During most of the talk Murray sat quietly in the room, and Molt did most of the talking. One time he broke in and said to me: "Come, now, Mrs. Pyne, you look like an intelligent woman. You are good looking and appear sensible. You should tell us everything and save us unnecessary work."

I laughed at them, saying, "Ha! ha! Pretty am I? Thank you for the compliment. But as for saving you work, you'd better get busy immediately. That's what you're around here for."

Then the officers gave me the impression that they would be forced to take me into their custody.

In a highly dramatic scene, facing Miss Mary Brennan, Mrs. Josephine Pyne, housekeeper for Frank W. Phipps, accused of having shot and killed Burnap, the victim of Lake Quinsigamond tragedy, denied the girl's statements and bravely came to the defence of the man, who is said to have left home and family for her sake.

PHIPPS IS HELD WITHOUT BAIL FOR TUESDAY HEARING

Worcester, July 13.—Charged with the murder of Charles L. Burnap, proprietor of the Lily Pond House on Lake Quinsigamond, Frank W. Phipps was to-day arraigned in the First District Court in this city and was held without bail to appear for a hearing on Tuesday.

At the same time Phipp's counsel announced [illegible] same court on Tuesday Mary Brennan, who was arrested in connection [illegible] before Phipps was [illegible] will also appear for a hearing. She is now at liberty upon her [illegible].

When Phipps was taken into court to-day it was [illegible] he had lost some of the [illegible] which had marked [illegible]. He was pale and appeared [illegible].

Court Clerk Simpson called him to the bar of the court. Judge Utley was on the bench.

"You are accused of murder—how do you plead?" the clerk asked.

"Not guilty," said Phipps with some spirit.

After court had adjourned to-day Miss Brennan told [illegible] story of the killing—the same story that she will tell, she said, upon the witness stand. She said:

"I am an orphan and I have lived in Worcester since my birth, twenty-one years ago. I have known Frank Kelly all my life. I met him again the day after I came to the Lily Pond House.

"I was surprised and glad to see him. He was surprised. He asked me what I was doing at the house. I told him working. Then he told me what kind of a place it was, and that I must get out of it at once.

"Tuesday night he came over and took me for a drive to get me away from the place and to talk over my future and a new place for me.

"We got back to the house and sat in the parlor. We had been there a short time when Phipps, Mrs. Payne, Raymond and George Moore came over from the Ledgemore.

Heard Tapping at Window.

"Later I heard tapping on the window. Then I heard Phipps talking in the kitchen. The next I knew trouble was brewing. I went out of the house by that door (pointing to the rear one). I heard shots and walked on this side of the house (pointing to the one opposite to the place from where the shots are alleged to have been fired).

"Then I went to the other side of the house. Still shots were fired. I did not see anyone shoot. In the meantime Kelly saw that matters were getting hot. He left me at once, and I believed that he was getting away because he was a police officer. But I also thought that he might have gone down there. But later I changed my mind.

"The first I thought of murder being done was when I heard Phipps and Mrs. Payne in that room talking. I distinctly heard them say that they would put the shooting on to Kelly. They said that he was a police officer and naturally carried a gun. Phipps said he could get out of it by getting up a story that there had been a fight and Kelly interfered because it was his duty and that Burnap's death would not be laid to anyone.

"I have no parents and nothing to sacrifice but myself. So when the officers came to me, I told them I shot Burnap."

STATE POLICE DENY TRUTH OF INTERVIEW GIVEN BY MRS PYNE

Worcester, July 13.—State Police Officers Murray and Molt deny the truth of the interview given to the press to-day by Mrs. Josephine Pyne and Maud Morse. Their denial is verified by the newspaper men present at the Lily Pond House during their visit.

The State police ridicule the story, which they claim is intended to divert attention from the Lily Pond House.

Mark Twain, Feeling Seven Years Younger, Postpone's Funeral.

London, July 13.—Mark Twain bade farewell to London to-day and sailed for home on the Atlantic Transport Line steamer Minnetonka. A great crowd of admirers at the station kept the American humorist busy shaking hands, and gave him a rousing cheer as the train left the station for Tilbury.

"I have had a violently gay life here for four weeks," he said, "but I felt no fatigue and have had little desire to quiet down. I'm younger now by seven years than I was, and if I could stay another month I could make it 40 years.

"This has been the most enjoyable holiday I ever had. I'm sorry the end has come. I have met a hundred old friends and made a hundred new ones. It is a good kind of riches to have. There is none better.

"For two years I have been planning my funeral, but I have changed my mind and postponed it. I suppose I shall not see England again, but I don't like to think of that."

PATRIARCH OF ALL MACKEREL IS CAUGHT

Gloucester, July 13.—An enormous mackerel, apparently the patriarch of the species, was brought into port to-day. It measures twenty-four inches and weighs seven pounds. It was caught off Eastern Point by Captain John Neson of the gasoline boat Reliance.

Five Wives Claim Bogus "Lord" Ventry as Their Husband

New York, July 13.—Cecil W. de Moleyns, who the police here declare is a bogus nobleman who has sailed under the title of "Lord Ventry," is to-day an unwilling traveler toward the West. He is on his way to Chicago to answer a charge of [illegible] by a woman who the officers declare is a fifth wife. Four other [illegible] the same title, it is charged, [illegible] city.

According to the police de Moleyns is a valet [illegible] assumed the title of a former master, and under this name married [illegible] women who claim him. All are [illegible], and the officers think the [illegible] money from each.

De Moleyns also used the name of Cecil Woodley. This was the name he gave the landlady at a Forty-eighth street house when he hired her best room. He confided to her that he was the third son of the Duke of Westmoreland, England, forced to flee to this country because of financial troubles. There was a handsome woman with him who passed as Mrs. Woodley.

TAFT'S SADDLE HORSE KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Washington, D. C., July 13.—"Charlie," the favorite saddle horse of Secretary of War Taft, was killed by lightning in a barn near this city during a thunder storm.

Heiress to Millions, Neice of Marshall Field, Wins Divorce

Chicago, July 13.—Mrs. Minna Field Gibson, niece of the late Marshall Field, and heiress to the $10,000,000 fortune of her father, the late Henry Field, was to-day granted an absolute divorce from her husband, Preston Gibson.

Three witnesses were heard, and the divorce, on grounds of cruelty, was granted in record time. Mrs. Gibson retains her [illegible] and the custody of her child for [illegible] months in each year.

Mrs. Gibson is the stepdaughter of Thomas Nelson Page, the author. Mr. Gibson is well known in social and club circles, and has attained a reputation as a polo player and author. They were married January 27, 1900, in New York. Their only son, Henry Field Gibson, was born December 15, 1902. The general charge of extreme and repeated cruelty is followed by the citation of two specific instances. It is charged that in December, 1904, in Chicago, Mr. Gibson seized his wife by her arms. The other charge is that on February, 1906, Mr. Gibson again maltreated her.

GROVER CLEVELAND IS RAPIDLY RECOVERING

Princeton, July 13.—Former President Grover Cleveland is resting at his home in this city, recuperating from his recent illness. Mr. Cleveland has not yet decided when he will leave Princeton to join his family in Tamworth, N. H., for the Summer.

McKinley Monument Controversy Again Stirs Springfield

Citizens Claim That the Design Is Inartistic, and They Want It Changed.

Springfield, July 13.—The monument to President McKinley, erected on [illegible] Heights [illegible] more than two years ago, is again the subject of a controversy. [illegible] Barney thinks the monument is inartistic and should be changed in several important particulars. If these changes are made Mr. Barney will meet the expense.

It is the monument the unveiling of which furnished material for John B. Mo[illegible] campaign for Governor last [illegible]. The monument was unveiled October 20, [illegible], Governor Guild delivering the oration of the day. Later it developed that Governor Guild accepted a sizable check for making the oration.

The [illegible] Philip Martiny, a pupil of [illegible], and the design was unanimously accepted by the committee in [illegible] with providing a suitable memorial to the martyred President from funds raised by public subscription amounting to [illegible] $15,000. Mr. Barney is not [illegible] who disapproves of the [illegible]. It was unveiled [illegible] feeling of disappointment [illegible].

Boy, Ten Years Old, Receives License as Automobile Driver

Grandson of Ex-Congressman Whiting Passes the Examination.

Springfield, July 13.—William Whiting, 2d, grandson of ex-Congressman William Whiting of Holyoke, is probably the youngest automobile driver in Massachusetts. The boy is only ten years of age, yet he handles an automobile like a veteran. G. C. Hubbell, official examiner for the State Highway Commission, put young Whiting through the necessary tests one day this week, and the boy came out with flying colors.

He not only passed the mental examination, but when it came to a practical demonstration of his skill he performed numerous feats with the automobile which won for him the commendation of Examiner Hubbell.

HEARST, IN FIGHT ON MERGER, WINS.

Justice Holt Rules Belmont-Ryan Combination Destroys Competition.

DECIDES MAYER ERRED

In Dismissing First Suit to Dissolve New York City Traction Trust.

THEREBY DELAYED ACTION

Monopoly Contrary to Public Policy and in Violation of Law.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The full text of Justice George C. Holt's decision in the United States Circuit Court, stamping the Ryan-Belmont traction merger as a monopoly operating in violation of the corporation laws of the State, finds:

That every contention in the application of William R. Hearst to the Attorney-General of the State of New York on February 14, 1906, to institute a suit to prevent the merger into one giant monopoly of all the transportation systems of Manhattan and the Bronx was a fact well founded.

In Violation of Law.

That the Attorney-General of New York in dismissing the Hearst complaint was wrong and that Mr. Hearst was right.

That the organization of that monopoly was a violation of the law.

That is ended all competition for better service between the subway, the surface and the elevated roads.

That it tended to end all competition for the construction of future subways as feeders of competing lines.

That the Belmont-Ryan merger was contrary to public policy as well as contrary to law.

That the Hearst action was in the public interest and for the public welfare.

Mr. Hearst's petition, filed with the Attorney-General in Albany in February, 1906, came to a hearing before Attorney-General Mayer before the merger was actually accepted. On the very day of the hearing in Albany, the New York papers printed advertisements of the Belmont-Ryan combine, urging and requesting stockholders to exchange their stock in the subway and surface for stock for the new Belmont-Ryan monopoly certificates.

Action Was in Time.

On that very day a pool of speculative stock was formed by insiders, partly or wholly for the benefit of politicians who were encouraged to buy the common stock (all water) of the merger, for a safe speculation up to $30 a share.

Attorney-General Mayer, in dismissing Mr. Hearst's suit after the hearing of Feb. 20, 1906, said that Mr. Hearst's application, which had been filed as soon as the intention of the companies to unite was published, was in ample time to stop the merger.

In his official opinion the Attorney-General said naively: "Any question as to this application being premature was waived by the counsel representing the corporation and persons against whom the petition was directed."

So there is no doubt but that Mr. Hearst acted in ample time to prevent the merger, but the Attorney-General, if he had been the paid agent of the Belmont-Ryan monopoly, instead of a faithful defender of the public's interests, could not have been a more docile, attentive and devoted nurse than he was at the birth of the great monopoly.

Mayer Refused to Act.

Chairman Wilcox of the new Public Utilities Commission now says:

"I hardly think it is our duty to probe existing mergers."

The result therefore is that Attorney-General Mayer refused to act BEFORE the merger crime was committed and Chairman Wilcox now thinks that his commission, created solely to defend the public interests, cannot probe the merger, because the crime has already been committed.

Mr. Hearst did all that any citizen could do to prevent the great public wrong when he furnished the evidence against the merger to the Attorney-General and asked for the institution of an action on behalf of the people.

The Attorney-General of New York did all he could to foster the monopoly CHARTERED FOR ONE THOUSAND YEARS upon New York when he denounced the petition.

Justice Sustains Hearst.

What Mr. Hearst next did was to furnish this evidence through his counsel, Mr. Shearn, to the citizens of another state, a stockholder in the New York City Railway [illegible] company, in order that that stockholder [illegible] do what Mr. Hearst, a citizen of New York State, could not do, namely, bring suit in the United States court [illegible] the people which the State of New York had denied to its own citizens.

It was upon this evidence, and with the legal opinion, the result of Mr. Hearst's action, that Daniel W. Burrows, a citizen of Illinois, and owner of the 1,400 shares of stock in the Metropolitan Securities Company, sued in the Circuit Court of the FLORENCE SCHENCK, ROMANCE ENDED, TRIES TO HIDE IN HOTEL.

Vanderbilt Reported to Be Aiding Southern Beauty In Her Distress.

DICTATES A STATEMENT

NEW YORK, July 13.—Florence R. Schenck, the Norfolk belle who bounded into fame early in March upon announcement that she would drive the blue ribbon horses of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt at the International Horse Show at London in June, has for a week been hidden in Room 73 of the Prince George Hotel in East Twenty-seventh street, her identity being concealed under the name of "Mrs. John H. Edwards, of Buffalo."

The girl, who has only passed her nineteenth birthday, is a nervous wreck; guarded every hour against visitors and newspaper reporters by Dr. C. Wesley Smith, of the Victoria Hotel, because the flood of notoriety and the woes forced upon the Southern beauty since she deserted her home to attach herself to the Vanderbilt entourage, has shattered her physical and mental health.

Vanderbilt Helps Her?

From the moment the Atlantic Transport steamship Minnehaha docked, July 6, with Wilson and the girl on board, New York was treated to a fresh sensation every hour for some days. Threats and recriminations followed fast.

The beauty of this lovely Virginia girl and the fame which came to her when it was heralded that she would drive in the ladies' event at the Olympia for Vanderbilt brought her a flood of sympathy when her awful p[illegible] became known. Letters from admirers, known and unknown, proffering financial assistance flowed to her hotel. Theatrical managers haunted her apartment against the wishes of the half frantic nurse installed by Dr. Smith, and checks came to her from unknown sources.

For two days there was a constant procession of men and women sending cards to the room, and finally Dr. Smith learned that cables had been in use between England and America, and the girl's pathway was thereafter to be gold paved.

"Take her secretly to another hotel" was the text of the first message. "See that she is kept in absolute quiet from this time on. Secrete her so that the newspapers will not learn her whereabouts and put a stop to all newspaper talk. She will not need for anything."

There is reason for the belief that Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, through an agent, had attended to that matter.

Since then she has been silent. Prior to that she was willing enough to talk and dictated the following statement:

By Florence Schenck.

Mr. Wilson married me at the hotel in Richmond. A short notice of our marriage appeared in the Richmond papers on the morning following the ceremony. Later Mr. Wilson himself wired my father and mother that we were married.

I was married to Mr. Wilson within the week after [illegible]. One day my father called me into his room and said: "I want to speak to you. I have heard that you were seen riding with Mr. Vanderbilt's manager and talking to him a good deal. You know you cannot associate with those men. They are nothing but common horsemen, and if you do associate with them you can't come into this house."

That night I went to a little dinner party and when I arrived home, at [illegible] minutes to twelve, I found the doors of the house locked. Two or three days later Mr. Wilson and I were married. People have seen my proofs.

About a month ago the story of my marriage to Mr. Wilson was printed in every paper in the United States. Once it was printed that we were married at Hamilton Terrace.

When I found that he had been married before, I lost all respect for him, and for myself. But by the time I found this out I had become so entangled that I could not extricate myself.

"Wilson Did Not Cast Me Off."

I don't want any more publicity. I would like the whole affair hushed up. But in one thing I have been wronged by the papers. Charlie Wilson absolutely did not cast me off. He begged me again and again to continue to live with him, and pleaded with me, and threatened to do everything to me if I refused.

The last word that he said to me was: "I shall never get over this. I shall never look at another woman as long as you live."

Mr. Wilson really loved me, I think, in his way. He often said: "I'll never do anything to hurt you."

It was simply that I said "I shan't live with you any longer," and he said, "You shall." It was about this that we quarrelled on the ship, and he became so angry at my refusal to live with him in New York that he knocked me senseless.

Was Afraid of Vanderbilt.

He even said he would quit Mr. Vanderbilt's service and we would live together. He tried to keep our affair from gaining publicity because—so he told me—Mr. Vanderbilt had been displeased, and if any more publicity was brought about he feared he would lose his job. The papers were all wrong about Mr. Wilson's $20,000 job. Mr. Wilson is paid [illegible].

I am married to Charlie Wilson. If necessary, I can prove it to the satisfaction of a court. But I do not wish to see him go to jail. I am a thoroughbred, and I would not do anything to ruin his life. I have the proofs, but I will not use them now that the marriage is illegal because of his having another wife.

It is my wish to get away from here as soon as possible. If I am able I will sail for Europe.

May Become Model.

I cannot go home. I think my father would kill me. And I think it would kill me to see my family. I'm not fit to speak to them. My mother loves me in her heart, I know, but he is different. Mrs. Bronson Howard, who was my closest friend, is in the South. But she is legally married, so, of course, her case is different. I have posed for artists in London and I can earn a living there. I have been dreadfully ill the past few days, and I was very ill crossing, but I hope soon to be able to sail.

I have absolutely no hard feeling in my heart toward Mr. Wilson. Everything was because, I believe, he really loved me. Once I said to him: "Suppose you and I should separate, and I should go down and down, how could you ever forgive yourself?" And he said: "If I hadn't won you, some other man would have won you." That was the way he looked at it.

PEABODY PLEADS IN VAIN FOR CHAUFFEUR

Lynn, July 13.—The plea put up by his employer, General Francis Peabody, the well-known Boston attorney, did not save Joseph Proctor, a chauffeur, to-day, from being found guilty of overspeeding Mr. Peabody's automobile. Neither did the fact that Mr. Peabody is a director in the recently organized society to prevent motor scorching.

A Modern Madonna Among Motherhood Contestants

MRS. GEORGE L HAGER AND DAUGHTER PHYLLIS

"Modern Madonnas." Such might be the caption for a collection of the beautiful motherhood pictures that the Beauty Contest, which is now closed, has brought together.

The chance to win the $100 prize for the most beautiful mother and child photograph is now ended.

Not as many mothers and babes have been printed as of the babies alone, and not nearly so many have been received, but those that have been entered have been lovely.

The last picture, the one published to-day, of Mrs. George Hager and her infant daughter Phyllis, is one of the most exquisite in its representation of true motherhood that has been published, and remarkable because of the extreme youth and helplessness of the baby.

The winning mother and child will be announced with the prize-winning beauty baby.

RECORD DEMONSTRATION PLANNED IN THIS YEAR'S LABOR DAY PARADE

Unions of Boston Co-Operate to Make Big Success of Old Home Week.

TO have the biggest turn-out this year that ever took part in a Labor Day parade is the effort being made by the Central Labor Union. "There is no better opportunity to get something for the class we represent than at present," said Henry Abrahams, secretary of the Central Labor Union. "We have the question of injunctions. We have the question that affects the building trades, especially in regard to the erection of a public building like the Franklin Institute by non-union labor. We have the recess committee. All these things will be affected by the number of men in the line of march. If we want to get something more for the uplifting of labor's army, a shorter work-day, a better wage, meaning more comfort for the little ones, better homes, more leisure to educate ourselves—every delegate to the Central Labor Union will do what he possibly can to have his organization in the line of march, and every member will answer at roll-call on Labor Day."

* * *

ORGANIZED labor of this city will co-operate during "Old Home" week in giving a cordial welcome to the visitors and providing for their entertainment. The Central Labor Union will keep its headquarters open day and night during the observance. The Central Labor Union has also suggested that all unions having headquarters take similar steps, and that a committee be appointed to direct visitors to various labor halls. The Barbers' Union will take a half day off during the week to entertain visiting brothers. The New England Women's Press Club Association and the Boston Proof Readers' Association will probably have headquarters together in some part of Mechanics' Building. All proof readers expecting to visit Boston between July 28 and August 3 will confer a favor by sending their names and addresses to the secretary of the association, Miss Nellie M. Barry, Parker Hill avenue, Roxbury.

Shea Boomed for Re-Election as International President of Teamsters' Union.

THE Greater Boston delegates to the convention of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, to be held here the first week in August at Paine Memorial Hall, are booming International President Cornelius P. Shea for re-election. President Shea is an East Boston boy and is a member of the Hand and Tipcart Teamsters' Union. Two hundred and fifty delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada are expected to attend. Headquarters will be established at the Castle Square Hotel, a stone's throw from the meeting place. The Team Drivers' District Council has appointed the following committee on entertainment of the visiting delegates: P. D. Daly, Joseph Turnbull, William Greaney, John J. Burns, Edward J. Burns, A. Silver, G. Houghton, Charles [illegible], Edward Hughes, Timothy Scott, John [illegible], A. McDonald, John O'Connell, J. A. Mooney, John McGonagle, John Lucy, J. A. Adams, Daniel J. Tobin, John M. Gillespie, William O'Neil and N. J. Lannon.

* * *

RELATIVE to the discussion on Sunday legislation, the industrial committee of the General Association of Congregational Churches of Massachusetts is getting the real opinions of the working people, through the Central Labor Unions of the State, in regard to the matter. They are ascertaining how many people sit constantly at their work and how many stand, how many work in rooms where artificial light is used, how many work in soap and chemical factories and other places where the air is bad, how many work in paper mills where there is much dust. These people, it is declared, have a greater need of Sabbath or day of rest. People who sit at work need exercise, say the ministers, and those who work in bad air need pure air at their leisure.

BELIEVING that Boston is the ideal convention city of the country, the officers and members of Typographical Union No. 13 of this city are already campaigning to have the next International convention held here. The delegates from the Boston local to the International convention, to be held at Hot Springs next month, will make a hard fight to bring the next convention to Boston. Next year the Boston union will observe its sixtieth anniversary, and it is hoped that the international convention will come here and help the members celebrate. It is seventeen years since the convention met in Boston.

FOR FATHER'S LUNCH

My little John, four years old, went down to the beach and caught a minnow. When coming home he said, "Mamma, don't give me a whipping for getting my feet wet. I been working hard and caught a fish for dinner."

When I told him that it was not big enough for dinner, he said, "Then, mamma, save it for papa's lunch box."

ONE NEW SPECIES

My little four-year-old Earle called me out last Sunday and exclaimed, "O mamma, I just saw a camel go by."

"No, dear," I said. "It couldn't have been a camel. It must have been a donkey. Didn't it have long ears."

"No," he replied, in much excitement. "It didn't have any ears at all. It was a box, and it takes pictures."

PROPERTY RIGHTS

One day my five-year-old Louise was knocking at the door of the lower flat for her little playmate when the child's brother came to the door and told Louise to get away from his door.

"You don't own the door," she argued.

"Yes, I do," he responded.

Louise was persistent.

"No you do not," she declared. "If you were moving you couldn't take the door with you. All you could take is the furniture. The door belongs to Mrs. M——, naming the owner of the house.

A DEEP THINKER

Our three-year-old, John, had been living with his grandfather.

He had been brought up to feel that Sunday was a day of rest, and his grandfather was accustomed to walk about the garden on that day.

One Sunday, soon after the death of his grandfather, he made the following remark to his mother:

"Well, I suppose that grandpa is walking around God's garden to-day."

My little son went out to Norumbega Park and became much interested in the monkeys.

LITERAL MATHEMATICS

When Margaret was two years and six months old she heard for the first time the words "double runner" and inquired of her young brother what it meant.

Brother answered, "Double is two. Double runner is two sleds fixed together to coast down hill."

Not long after, Margaret, who was looking out of the window, called to me:

"Look, Mamma, come and see the double runner."

What I saw was a woman hurrying along with a small child in her arms.

"Why do you call the woman and baby a double runner?" I asked.

She replied: "Brother said double is two, and the woman running with the baby is a double runner, isn't she?"

"No, mamma," she begged, "don't wake me. When I'se asleep I'se gone away."

TRIUMVIRATE OF AUTHORS BRIGHT SAYINGS JUDGES

Charles F. Pidgin, Jacques Futrelle and Miss Mary Boyle O'Reilly to Pick Winners.

A REMARKABLE triumvirate will sit in judgment at the close of the BRIGHT SAYINGS CONTEST, and with discrimination of heart and brain and genius will decide which child is entitled to the $500 Dorchester building lot. These judges are:

JACQUES FUTRELLE, whose stories of mystery, best known as "The Thinking Machine" series, have proved one of the literary sensations of the year.

CHARLES FELTON PIDGIN, for many years chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, author of many books of historical romance and fiction stories, chief among them "Blennerhassett" and "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

MARY BOYLE O'REILLY, daughter of the late poet, John Boyle O'Reilly, a charming and gifted young woman.

Miss O'Reilly's clever short stories, with their rare heart interest, have won her literary fame and divide her time with her philanthropies.

Last December Miss O'Reilly was appointed by Governor Guild a member of the Massachusetts Prison Commission.

Previously she had been appointed by Mayor Fitzgerald a member of the board of trustees of the Children's Institutions Department. She was one of the three founders of the Guild of St. Elizabeth, and holds office in many other philanthropic and charitable organizations.

With such judges, all of them interested in children and appreciative of their words, the contest will be admirably judged.

NOTED ARTISTS NOW BEGIN WORK OF DECIDING FAIREST BABY IN GREATER BOSTON

Great Mass of Photographs, Sent in by Fond Parents or Friends, Confronts Them.

By Eleanor Ames.

It is ended.

The Boston Sunday American's Prize Baby Beauty Contest has closed.

The five pictures printed to-day complete the hundred weekly prize winners, and the fate of the babies in the great contest is in the hands of the judges.

All but the final chapter has been written in one of the most interesting contests of beauty ever made by a newspaper.

The Boston Sunday American started early in the year on a quest for the most beautiful baby in Greater Boston. It solicited the help of every man and woman, parent and friend of babies, to help find the prize baby.

$500 For Most Beautiful Baby

It offered for that baby a purse of $500 to be deposited in a bank to the credit of the lucky child to remain at accumulating interest until the winner should celebrate its eighteenth birthday.

To decide the merits of the babies it sought the help of the five most noted women artists in New England to act as a jury.

These artists are:

Mrs. Henry H. Kitson, who is acknowledged to be the most noted sculptress in America.

Mrs. Jean Paul Selinger, whose paintings of flowers and fruit and whose landscapes are world famous.

Miss Mary L. Macomber, who as a painter of religious subjects and particularly of Madonnas has made her name known on both sides of the Atlantic.

Miss Sally Cross, who is regarded as the best painter of children among America's young artists.

Miss Jean Oliver, whose exquisitely executed miniatures are known wherever true art is known.

Rests Entirely with Judges

To these judges was entrusted the choosing each week since March 3 of the five most beautiful photographs from the thousands that have been received.

Each Sunday for twenty weeks five beautiful babies' pictures have been published. Each of these weekly prize winners has received a prize of $10 [illegible]

As this issue of the Sunday American goes to press all the photographs are in the hands of the judges.

Together they will examine and judge every photograph, and the result will be the prize winner.

The decision will rest entirely with them. No person in any way connected with the Boston Sunday American will be present at the final judging.

Bewildering Mass of Photos

It is a stupendous task.

The contest has brought together a bewildering mass of child beauty.

The plain child has been the exception. And so the picking out from many beauties of THE ONE GREATEST BEAUTY will be a difficult and serious task.

Just as soon as the judges have made the final choice the announcement will be made in the Sunday American, together with reproductions of photographs of the winning child, a sketch of it and the reasons why it was selected, AS TOLD BY THE JUDGES.

Supplementary to the great baby contest, but no less important, was the offer of a prize of $100 for the most beautiful picture of mother and child.

Every mother and child picture received in this office will be submitted to the same judges, and they are now ready to choose the winner.

A Little Personal Chat

And now for a little personal chat with the mothers.

My part in this contest has been only that of seeing that all the pictures reached the judges and of reporting to you what they decided.

In other words, I have been the "middle man," the intermediary between mother and jury.

I have met comparatively few of you face to face, but I have come to feel that I have a real acquaintance with you as the mothers of the babies whose faces have become so familiar to me.

Perhaps no one else knows so well how keen will be the disappointment of every mother except the lucky baby's mother.

So I am going to ask every one of you to try to be philosophical and school yourself to feel a glad surprise if your baby is chosen and a calm indifference if he is passed by.

That will be difficult, will it not?

Your Own Best of All

But you know the judges will look upon the babies with the trained eyes of artists, not with the love-lighted eyes of the mothers.

And if they don't choose your baby, why not put in your hearts a feeling of pity for them instead of resentment against them, for, after all, you know that to you your own blessed baby is the most beautiful in the world and a whole army of the greatest artists that ever lived couldn't convince you otherwise.

Which is perfectly just and right, and shows that you are splendid, good, true mothers.

"JAIL ALL TRUST HEADS WHO VIOLATE LAW"

—Louis D. Brandeis

Boston Lawyer Points to Toledo Convictions as the Way to Enforce the Statutes.

"PEOPLE'S WILL SUPREME"

"IN Toledo, where 23 of the best-known business men in the city have been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment each in the workhouse for violating the anti-trust laws, they have shown what can be done to the trusts. The merger in Massachusetts is a transportation trust, and, if the people of Massachusetts want the laws here enforced as they have been in Toledo, there is no power on earth that can prevent the enforcement of those laws."

So said Louis D. Brandeis, the lawyer and publicist, yesterday, in discussing the sentencing to jail in Toledo of twenty-one lumbermen and two bridge men who had been found guilty of having violated the Valentine anti-trust law.

Must Go to Jail.

Word was received from Toledo last night to the effect that the sentenced men had secured a ten day's stay of execution.

Their counsel announced that they would fight against the carrying out of the sentence, but the best informed lawyers in Toledo declare that the convicted men will have to go to the workhouse.

"This conviction in Toledo together with the recent work of Folk in Missouri is a proof that the anti-trust laws are not a dead letter," declared Mr. Brandies.

"It is a question of what the people want. The people in the first place and their legislators in the second. The laws are here and the courts are here to enforce them. When the people decide what they want they will get it, for the courts and legislators are bound to obey the will of the people.

"Let the People Decide."

"This is particularly easy in Massachusetts where we have the best system of laws and courts in the Union. It is applicable in the case of the merger. It is only for the people to decide that they do not want the merger. It is useless to say that portions of the stock have already been bought, and that it is no use to act now. We can undo knots just as easily as we can prevent them. If the people think that it could be beneficial to have the Boston & Maine, the New Haven and the Boston & Albany operate as separate systems, if they decide that competition is best for the interests of the Commonwealth, they will get it.

The merger is only a case of a transportation trust, and that kind of a trust is no different from any other. In Toledo they have shown what can be done to the trusts, and we can do the same here. The law will be respected if the people want it to be.

The case of the Northern Securities Companies, when the Interstate Commerce Commission busted the combine between the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern, is an example of what can be done in untying knots.

"It is as I said, only for the people to decide what they want, and they will get it. Their legislators are bound to obey their will."

JEWS PLAN HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTIVES

Project Well Under Way and Committee Is Looking for Site to Build.

Samuel H. Borofsky, chairman of the mass meeting that was instrumental in pushing through the plans for the Boston Jewish Hospital for consumptives that is to be built in this city, in an interview yesterday with a reporter for the Sunday American, said:

"Already twenty-five of the leading Jewish physicians of this city, assisted by a committee of the prominent Jewish business men, are looking about for a site upon which to construct the necessary buildings, and it is expected that before the Winter sets in the hospital will be in a fair way to receive patients.

"Several meetings have been held and permanent committees have been chosen to go ahead in the matter. Dr. Maurice Gerstein has been chosen chairman of the hospital committee and Dr. Philip Sumner is to act as secretary.

"Dr. Harry Linenthal, Dr Callman M. Davidson and Dr. Maurice Gerstein are to act as representatives of the physicians on the advisory board. On Monday the women of the Helping Hand Society are to meet and it is expected that a committee from this organization will be selected to confer with the committee of physicians already named.

"Afterwards will be determined whether the hospital will be utilized for incipient or advanced cases, a question which the advisory board will determine.

"We are spending thousands of dollars annually in respect to the treatment of people of the Jewish faith of this terrible disease. As there has been a recent State law passed which says that none but citizens are to be admitted to some of these hospitals which are under State supervision, the need of this hospital was never felt so much as at the present, as the immigrant Jew will have no chance if he is taken suddenly with the disease.

"We intend to fund the hospital as nearly non-sectarian as possible, but the Jewish people are not used to the home life and food of other people and therefore they are not at peace in institutions of a character other than their own."

BOYNTON PLANS TO START ONE-TRACK LINE IN FALL

Offers Lease Privileges to Trolley and Steam Roads Throughout State.

If E. Moody Boynton, the inventor of the bicycle railway, carries out his plans, the work of building his road between Boston and Fall River will be begun in October. To all railroads and railways in the State Mr. Boynton has offered the opportunity to enter into an arrangement with him by which he will be permitted to lay his single rail between their double tracks and build his overhead structure above his rail. The overhead structure would be supported by posts and brackets between the double tracks and would not in any way interfere with steam trains or electric cars.

Mr. Boynton has given the Boston Sunday American a scientific explanation of his system.

Here is his statement:

Explains His System.

The scientific work and preliminary organization for building the Boynton single track railway double lines to Fall River are in preparation for October contracts. In the meantime, as Mr. Boynton's charter is very broad and gives the privilege of leasing his privilege of equipment to all the existing steam, electric and elevated roads in the State, Mr. Boynton has held out the olive [illegible] all the companies to unite upon any fair terms to immediately give the people of Massachusetts all the benefit of this greatest transportation [illegible], which will give four-fold quicker transit with absolute safety, and may be applied without interference to the existing lines. This can be done without interfering with their present traffic during the elevation of the third rail over head, as it may be supported by posts and brackets from an open space between all double-track lines.

"At the present time the New York and the New Haven Railroad, the Boston & Maine Railroad, the Boston Elevated, the Boston & Northern & Southern all use deadly wires or third rail surface conductors of electricity.

On Overhead Rail.

"Surely it would be safer, better and more convenient to put that rail overhead, where no hand can touch it.

The Boynton narrow two-story trains can, with no increased expense, give to double-track lines of sixteen fold capacity, as follows:

"It is well known that the double track lines are built to prevent collisions and make continuous outward and inward transit without waiting at sidings. It quadruples the capacity of the road. Thus the fact that Boynton makes a double track of the single-track without any change of the roadway or interference with its gauge or capacity to transport, this double track, with a separate train on each [illegible], with two-story cars, gives more than four-fold capacity and much greater luxury, with separate chairs and compartments in the lower story of each train for parties desiring privacy.

"The sliding doors cuts down the time of ingress and egress to one-tenth that now required. All standing room or contact with another's clothes is prevented by the use of the separate chairs and seats.

Provides Privacy.

By being edgewise and double depth, these cars, made of wood veneer and steel, are of one-eighth the weight which they would be if made entirely of steel and about one fourth the weight of the existing two-rail cars. Instead of climbing up four feet to get into a car, the entrance to the first floor is within a foot of the ground and is entered by sixteen doors sliding automatically.

"By a four-fold speed, easily attained, this invention gives sixteen-fold capacity to the existing roads in the transportation of passengers. The cost of operating these trains one hundred and seventy-five miles per day, or from Boston to New York, is less than one ton of coal.

"A thousand engineers have tested and approved this single rail system. Sixteen committees of the Massachusetts Legislature ran the train four separate years and approved it and recommended it to the State.

"The Rapid Transit Company of New York is the largest railroad company in the world. It embraces the elevated, the subway system and the suburban. Chief Engineer Baston, of the Brooklyn side, Chief Engineer Waterhouse, of the New York Manhattan Elevated, and F. S. Pearson, their consulting engineer, approve of the invention.

Experts Approve.

"Professor Kennelly of Harvard College, Professor Buck of the Chicago University, and Professor Houston, who first established our trolley lines, state the invention is a great one.

"The United States Congress receives the official report of more than ninety-two thousand accidents annually settled for by railways. If a remedy has been found, let them join in applying it to the [illegible] miles for which the locations have been obtained and the plans are now being drawn.

By the Boynton system a train is grooved and driven as smooth as a rifle [illegible]. It has no tendency to leave the track and could not so if it would. It can be driven from ocean to ocean in a [illegible], and while theoretically it can be driven as fast as a projectile or cannon ball, its speed for absolute safety should not exceed 300 miles an hour, say these [illegible] engineers.

Like a top or bicycle, while running the gyroscopic action would hold it erect, [illegible] the steel beam above within an inch of which the overhead wheels are placed make it certain.

No Oscillation.

A trolley connection that can never leave the beam or give out a spark will drive the train at any speed desired without any oscillation.

"If you turn a wide plank edgewise it will support ten times the load and be no heavier. If you make a narrow train of double depth you quadruple the strength, which is again quadrupled by cutting the width to one-half.

Mr. Boynton's wheels are driven by an interior motor exactly like a watch, with a hundred horse power in each wheel, with the armatures self keyed, without any structure work where the figures occur.

Uses Gyroscopic Motor.

"Field magnets are suspended on the centre pinion or axle. The current from the steel beam above starts the multiple wire armatures in series, and silently this wheel can be driven at any speed up [illegible] the [illegible] or bursting of the best malleable plate steel, which like the sides of a watch, support the double flanges within which the power without weight of any machinery is placed.

"Twelve years ago Mr. Boynton patented the gyroscopic motor. They operate precisely as the five-foot toy of which so much has been said in magazines and papers of Mr. Brennan's invention. It has no earthly use as applied to railroad work unless in the form of supplementary action as applied by Mr. Boynton.

SLAYER OF SENATOR FIGHTS FOR HER LIFE

Washington, July 13.—Mrs. Annie Bradley, the slayer of former Senator Arthur Brown of Utah, is to-night making a fight for her life. She was operated upon for a serious complaint at the George Washington University Hospital.

If she survives, she will go back to the cell she has occupied in murderers' row in the jail and there await her trial for life in the Fall. Her attorneys will make an effort to secure her release on bail before Judge Wright Monday.

Judge Wright last week liberated Gaston Philip, the millionaire club man of New York and Washington, on $25,000 bail, pending his trial for the killing of cabman Frank McAboy. If bail is granted, and is not too high, Mrs. Bradley may be given her liberty until the Fall term of court.

FAIRBANK'S DRINK TO BE BUTTERMILK

Vice-President to Shun Cocktails During Summer Residence in Bay State.

Mrs. Evelyn Masury, national president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, yesterday mounted guard at the Pedrick farm house in Danvers at which Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks will arrive one day this week to spend the Summer.

Vice-President Fairbanks will follow his wife within a few weeks. Their daughter, Mrs. John W. Timmons, wife of Lieutenant Timmons of the United States Navy, is already at the farmhouse with three servants getting it in readiness for her father and her mother.

Mrs. Masury, who selected the house as the Fairbanks Summer home, declared yesterday that she does not believe the cocktail story and said that as long as the Fairbanks family is at the farmhouse she will see that none of them is disturbed by any outsiders.

Danvers Sad at Seclusion.

Inhabitants of Danvers were cast down yesterday when they learned that Mrs. Masury had decided upon a policy of seclusion. They had all hoped that they might have the happiness of drinking a social glass of buttermilk with Vice-President Fairbanks.

Mrs. Timmons was busy yesterday arranging the furniture in the farmhouse. The house is lighted with the primeval kerosene lamp. Rag carpets are on the floors. The chairs are singularly tall backed and unconscionably uncomfortable.

The china that is in the house was new many years ago, but neither Mrs. Timmons nor Mrs. Masury seemed disturbed about that yesterday. They said that the idea was to have a real old-fashioned country summer and they guessed they would have to take some of the inconveniences along with the fresh air and new butter and eggs.

Buttermilk "Cocktails."

Buttermilk to be drunk on the premises, as the signs say, is raised on the premises, and Vice-President Fairbanks will find in Danvers buttermilk as good and thick as any that has been handed to him along the banks of the Wabash in the State of which he is the favorite son.

Mrs. Timmons, who is in general of the house pending the arrival of her mother, was married to Lieutenant Timmons in 1903. Her first marriage was to Dr. H. R. Allen of Indianapolis. She divorced him shortly after their marriage.

She and John W. Timmons had attended Wesleyan University together and after being graduated there young Timmons went to Annapolis and then into the navy.

After the divorce of the Vice-President's daughter, she, while a guest at Senator Hanna's home, met Timmons again. He was then an ensign in the Navy. They were married, and since that time Mrs. Timmons has entertained a great deal, and has been of assistance to her mother in the latter's social activities and in those campaigns connected with Mrs. Fairbanks's interest in social and patriotic organizations.

Y. P. C. U. MEETING ENDS IN PEACE PLEA

The 836 delegates to the annual convention of the Young People's Christian Union ended their last day in Boston yesterday by going to Nantasket Beach and spending the evening in amusement. A cablegram expressive of the organization's interest in The Hague conference was sent to The Hague.

WOMEN MEET TO ADVANCE UNIONS

For First Time in History They Gather Simultaneously to Discuss Progress.

SESSIONS IN THREE CITIES

For the first time in the history of the country women of organized labor are meeting simultaneously to-day in Boston, New York and Chicago to consider the important question of "How May Women's Unions Best Be Strengthened?"

For the Boston meeting, to be held in Catholic Union Hall, Washington street and Worcester square, at 4 o'clock this afternoon, several notable union speakers have been secured and a number of delegates from all over the State will appear.

Mrs. Mary Morton Kehew, president of the Massachusetts Branch of the National Women's Trade Union League, under whose auspices the meeting is held, will preside. John F. Tobin of the league's executive board and president of the International Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, will make the opening address. He will be followed by Arthur M. Huddell, treasurer of the league and president of the Boston Central Labor Union, and by Mrs. Mary Kenney O'Sullivan, vice-president of the league and well known for her devotion to the cause of labor.

Union Women Entertain.

Following some songs by Miss Augustine Paquette of the Bindery Women's Union, Local No. 56, there will be five-minute speeches by Henry Sterling of the Typographical Union and Henry Abrahams, secretary of the Cigarmakers' Union.

Reports of the various delegates will then be made, as follows: Miss Nora Shea, for the boot and shoe workers of North Adams; Miss Hattie Mason, for the boot and shoe workers of Haverhill; Miss Rose Brennan, for the textile workers of Fall River; Miss Mattie A. Gillespie, for the women of the Typographical Union; Mrs. Clair, for women telegraphers; Mrs. Rose Scully, tobacco strippers; Miss Lauretta Corrigan for the book binders; Miss Margaret Sculley, for the garment workers of Boston, and the Misses Hall and Landry, for the garment workers of Gloucester. Men delegates from the Central Labor Union and from the United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers' Union will also speak for their particular crafts.

Will Meet New Delegates.

A reception will be held for the women delegates from 3 to 4 o'clock in the parlors adjoining the hall to meet Mrs. Kehew, Miss Mary C. Crawford, the new secretary of the League, Miss Anne Withington, Miss Mary Hartnett, and Miss Lauretta Corigan of the executive board.

Refreshments will be served at the close of the general meeting, to which all women interested in unions are invited.

"The conference to be held is an affair of deep significance in the labor world and in the national life," said Miss Mary C. Crawford, secretary of the league. "It is a prophecy of the time when through organization women shall have arrived at a conscious sense of their own industrial value to the community.

"This will mean adequate remuneration and conditions of labor adapted to women's physical constitution. It will also place women's share in the world of labor upon a basis at once permanent and for the good of all."

The New York meeting will be presided over by Miss Rose Schneidermann of the Cap Makers' Union, who at the meeting of the National Women's Trade Union League held in New York last April suggested the idea of the conference. Delegates from cities as distant as Washington will attend this section of the conference.

FALL RIVER MILL GIRL LEADS WOMEN IN MOVE TO ADVANCE UNIONS

ROSE A. BRENNAN

The Illinois State League will draw its delegates from its own State and from important industrial centers in the adjoining States.

Delegates will be welcomed by Mrs. Raymond Robins, national president of the Women's Trade Union League, and by Frank J. Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Miss Jane Adams, vice-president of the national body will be present.

Miss Rose A. Brennan, who was delegated with Mrs. Mary K. O'Sullivan of Boston at the last convention of the National Women's Trade Union League in New York last April to arrange for the State meeting of the league, which is to be held in Boston to-day, is a Fall River mill girl. She has been prominent in getting women who work in the mills in Fall River to join the unions of their respective crafts for many years.

For ten years she has been an active member of the Weavers' Union of Fall River, and is one of the five delegates representing that union in the Central Labor Union.

When the Women's Union Label League was organized in Fall River several years ago she took an active interest in the movement to create a demand for union label goods, and was the first secretary of the organization, a position she held for a year and a half.

During the big strike in Fall River in 1904 Miss Brennan was in Boston. She joined the Women's Trade Union League at that time and was active in the work which this league did, through Miss Gertrude Barnum, Mrs. O'Sullivan and others to secure places for the girls who were out of work in Fall River because of the strike.

Miss Brennan subsequently returned to Fall River, and she is now working as a weaver.

HAYWOOD DEFENCE DEFIES REBUTTAL

Witnesses for State Fail to Shake Stories Introduced in Miner's Behalf.

HAYWOOD FINE WITNESS

By J. S. Dunnigan.

Boise, Idaho, July 13.—The defence in the case of W. D. Haywood, charged with the murder of former Governor Steunenberg, was concluded to-day and rebuttal was begun.

John C. Rice, a Caldwell witness, was called by the State. He swore that Harry Orchard had no mustache when he was in Caldwell. This was to refute the testimony of Elliott, the old soldier, who said he talked with Orchard about Steunenberg.

Dan Gainey, formerly a Coeur d'Alene miner, who roomed with Orchard, was called. This witness testified that he talked with Dominick Flynn a few days after the Bunker Hill explosion. Flynn swore that Orchard was in Mullan that day, and now Gainey says Flynn told him he had not seen Orchard for a month.

Fail to Shake Stories.

Thus far the State has failed to shake the stories of the witnesses for the defence.

Prosecutor Hawley used up the forenoon session with scattering rebuttal of testimony given by witnesses for the defence. Railroad men were called to contradict Elliott, who testified he saw Orchard on a train on November 28, 1905.

Gus Paulson, one of the owners of the Hercules mine, testified that Orchard sold his interest in the mine in 1898. Witnesses also said Bill Davis visited the mine after the Bunker Hill and Sullivan explosions and remained there three weeks. Davis said he worked there. The State claims he was in hiding.

The State attempted to get in as rebuttal the record of the conviction of John M. O'Neil, editor of the Miners' Magazine, who was found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree in South Dakota in 1880. Judge Wood will hear arguments on this before it is admitted.

Haywood Excellent Witness.

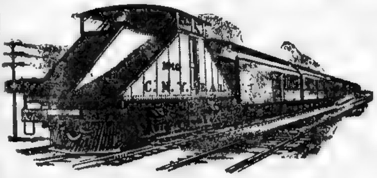
Haywood was a splendid witness in his own behalf, though he underwent a most severe and searching cross-examination.

Senator Borah was thorough in his work and at all times fair and square with the defendant. Once, when Clarence S. Darrow and Richardson thought they ought to object, Haywood informed his attorneys he would answer any question the Senator might ask.

$5.00 a Month Pays for a Share of Stock in Chicago-New York Electric Air Line Railroad

The Price of this Stock Advances Midnight July 27th to $51.00 a Share.

The Chicago-La Porte-Goshen Division, Now Being Constructed, an Exceptionally Attractive Investment Proposition. A Limited Amount of Stock Available at $50.00 a Share.



Were You on the List?

Millions of dollars were paid out July 1st in railroad dividends. You were not on the list. Because not until the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line proposition was offered to the public did you ever have an opportunity to help build a railroad. Yet there has been more money made in railroad building and railroad operation than in any other form of business.

Ordinarily before railroad stock can be worth a cent that railroad must earn enough money to pay operating expenses and cost of maintenance; 5 per cent. interest on its bonds—which represent the cost of the road—and, usually, an established rate of interest on Preferred Stock. If there is anything left, it belongs to the Common Stock. The fact that the railroads of the United States are able to earn 5 per cent. on their cost and still have millions of dollars left for distribution twice a year among their stockholders makes railroad securities the most attractive form of investment. In the case of the Air Line Railroad every dollar of the earnings over and above the cost of operation and maintenance is available for dividends.

You can get on that list of owners of dividend earning railroad securities—by helping to build the CHICAGO-NEW YORK ELECTRIC AIR LINE RAILROAD. You can collect your dividends in advance by paying for the stock at the rate of $50 for a $100 share.

The Way to Get Rich

The way to make money is to buy something that will double in value. The minute the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line Railroad earns an adequate interest on its cost, it will double in value. The portion which has been completed already is earning dividends. The Air Line has no bonded indebtedness. The 5 per cent. on the cost usually paid to bondholders, if paid to stockholders, would double the present purchasing value of the Air Line stock. The additional per cent. which the best railroads pay their stockholders, after the bondholders are cared for, in itself would be sufficient to double the present purchasing value of this stock. Money is worth what it earns, and the way to get rich is to make your money work hard and earn much,—double it if possible—and double it again.

Will Such a Railroad Pay if Built?

No one doubts it. Interurban electric roads always have paid and paid big. The enormous natural traffic between Chicago and New York and through every mile of the intervening territory, now inadequately supplied with railroad facilities, is a guarantee of big returns. The saving in interest alone will amount to 5 per cent. on the cost. The saving in cost of operation through the substitution of electric for steam power will amount to as much more. If the stock earned nothing more than these savings the stockholder buying at $50 per share will more than double his money.

Is It Being Built?

There is nothing experimental in this Chicago-New York Electric Air Line project. A railroad is being built from Chicago to New York, where a railroad is needed. At present the work is being concentrated on that portion which lies between Chicago and La Porte, Indiana. As soon as this division is completed it will commence operations, and commence earning money for the stockholders. This railroad is being better constructed than the ordinary railroad. It is being built with a view to reducing operating expenses to a minimum and increasing speed and safety.

The success of every corporation depends upon the integrity and ability of the management. The management of this railroad building project is in the hands of experienced railroad men who already have demonstrated their capacity and worth. Here is what one man writes after having traveled over a thousand miles to investigate the proposition:

I wish to express to you my appreciation for the thoroughly kind consideration I received at the hands of the officials of the several companies engaged in this great enterprise. I can say truthfully that I never met a set of men who impressed me more forcibly for straight-forwardness and frankness, and so thoroughly devoid of any hidden purposes. Perfect harmony seems to be the watchword, and on these sound principles, so well inoculated in the strong characters of the different officials, nothing but success can keep company with them.

It will be a pleasure to give further information to any one interested. Yours very truly, (Signed) W. S. RAUCH.
Special Representative of Commerce and Finance, Newark, N. J.

What Has Been Done Toward Building the Air Line

The survey of the Chicago-New York route has been completed from the City Limits of Chicago to the Pennsylvania State line.

Seven railroad camps have been organized and equipped between La Porte and the new steel city of Gary, Ind., and some 600 men, aided by the most modern machinery, have partially completed twenty miles of railroad.

Five miles of railroad have been completed and put in operation running out to La Porte towards Chicago, so perfectly constructed that the La Porte Common Council officially commended the Company and most of the La Porte business men have become stockholders.

Right-of-way, 100 feet wide, for practically 25 miles of railroad, has been bought and paid for.

Fifty-year franchises have been secured in Goshen, La Porte, Tolleston and Gary. Gary is the big industrial city which is being built 25 miles east of Chicago by the U. S. Steel Co., and which will have a population of 200,000 in a few years.

Reciprocal traffic agreements have been made with the Murdock people, who control 90 per cent of the electric traction interests in Ohio and Indiana, which agreements will give the Air Line Railroad entrance into South Bend, Indiana, and will bring to the railroad business from the Murdock lines—north, south and east—a business which alone will go far to make the Chicago-La Porte-Goshen Line exceedingly profitable.

Every attack in the press or in the courts has been successfully met and its right to public confidence absolutely demonstrated and the company has agreed to redeem at par every share of stock in transportation.

The Company earnestly invites the most rigid investigation, and will make it as easy as possible for you to investigate. The more the enterprise is investigated the greater appears the opportunity it presents to [illegible] profitable business. [illegible] to go to La Porte, [illegible] personally investigate, but nearly everyone has some friend in Chicago who could run out to the field of operation and report. You can get in touch with someone who has investigated. A group of investors can combine and send a representative to make a personal investigation.

Write to us for more information. Let us send you a copy of the Air Line News for July, now out, containing illustrations and a full account of the Air Line Opening Day exercises, in which Mayor Darrow, of La Porte, Mayor Becker, of Milwaukee, and Mayor Dahlman, of Omaha endorsed the enterprise in unqualified terms.

We extend to everyone a cordial invitation to call at any of our offices and learn more about this great enterprise.

SHORT COVERING HALTS BREAK IN STOCKS AFTER WEEK'S SLUMP

HARRIMAN TALK FRIGHTENS SHORTS.

By Thomas C Shotwell.

New York, July 13.—Rumors that the Interstate commerce commission would publish a very quiet report on the Harriman railroads to-morrow was used by the bull party in Wall street to-day to frighten shorts into covering. The short interest was very large and very foolish and therefore was easily frightened. Under the leadership of Union Pacific the market advanced from 2 to 3 points. A good bank statement furnishe further ammunition for the bulls, who were themselves surprised when it was disclosed that the surplus reserves had increased $6,020,800 and the loans decreased $10,888,400. Instead of the expected loss of cash there was an actual increase of $4,000,000. This statement proved beyond doubt that the really big people want a favorable view taken of things.

London was very uncertain in its movements, but a cheerful tone prevailed, and American stocks were steady. Grain was much stronger; cotton was weaker.

Owing to the further confirmation of the bonanza strike in the Daisy syndicate at Goldfield there was another upheaval in gold stocks. The Consolidated and all other substantial issues on the mining lists joined the advance.

The foreign demand for American grain and cotton this year will be far above the normal, and the prices that will be demanded by America are expected to cause the importation of at least $60,000,000 in gold before January 1.

BULL MOVE FOILED BY PUBLIC DISTRUST

Bank Statement Helps Boost Prices Substantially at Close of Week.

Substantial gains, scattered through the price list, ended a week which was otherwise a period of steadily declining stock values. The markets were not active yesterday, however, and but for the firmness of tone of the trading would have been all that they usually are on a Summer Saturday.

Covering by the shorts was all that saved the market from another break. The shorts had held full sway all the week but they had lowered prices to a point where a still further break would have wofully weakened the situation. It happened, too, that a series of lower price levels during the week had sent stocks down to prices which readily lent themselves to profit-taking by the shorts yesterday, and the form of support provided by their buying caused the slight rally noted.

Favorable Bank Statement.

An unexpectedly favorable bank statement served to strengthen prices still further. The surplus was brought up from almost nothing to $6,877,050, the net increase being $6,020,800. A decrease of nearly $8,000,000 in deposits and the surprising increase of over $4,000,000 in cash holdings lowered the reserve required and increased the reserve held, with the substantial gain in surplus the result. Loans were decreased by $10,888,400, manifestly in part the result of the liquidation.

What with the bank statement and the covering of the shorts, the stock market was made to have just one day of strength during the week. The previous days had been days of weak markets, the result of a sudden, swift blow that gave to the miniature bull movement of the preceding two weeks its final quietus.

Bull Move Collapses.

The collapse of the bull movement Monday and the cut in the prices of copper metal were the principal events of the week. In between were sandwiched failures of the Union Pacific and Atchison bond subscriptions and the continued tightness of money.

It is now evident that the time was not ripe for a bull raid. Money was too scarce to finance it, and the distrustful public could not be induced to re-enter the stock market. The lure had been created by deliberate manipulation of prices.

The wee bull movement was a structure built on sand, and the buffeting of the storm of scarce money, general distrust and adverse public opinion caused its fall.

The return to the old order of things which has endured during the greater part of this year, wherein the situation afforded a continual opportunity for short selling with occasional rallies caused by short covering, was helped along by such news events as the announcement that the Department of Justice at Washington had applied for a receiver for the Tobacco Trust, by the scarcity of money already [illegible] and the Union Pacific and Atchison bond fiascos.

The professional traders who now monopolize the stock market cling to the attitude that the Wall Street king can do no wrong. The natural query then is as to why they should fear the moves of the Administration.

Bonds in Bad Way.

As for the failure of the Union Pacific $75,000,000 convertible bond issue, it was hardly to be expected that the issue would be a success when, only a short while before it was to be sucribed for, the New York city bond issue collapsed. The underwriting syndicate of the Union Pacific issue, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., is trying to make it appear that there was no failure, but financial interests are well aware that the public subscriptions amounted to only about 10 per cent of the total. The bond market is in bad shape. The people of the country have become tired of lending, always lending money to the railroad companies at small rates of interest, and it is becoming more and more evident that capital is increasing in value.

The Atchison issue of $98,000,000 is a matter of the future. Of that amount $26,000,000 was to be subscribed for on Thursday, but this fared about as badly as did the Union Pacific issue. The Atchison must now either borrow the money on short-term notes in the open money market or else go without it.

Three Cent Copper Drops.

The cut in copper prices amounted substantially to three cents per pound. For weeks there had been loud statements made by the stock market touters, trying to increase commission business, that as soon as the price of the metal was reduced the stock market would be stimulated and strengthened. The cut in the prices has had, however, no beneficial effect, and it is more likely that it has contributed to the general weakness.

In the New York market yesterday only moderate transactions marked the strong trading. Union Pacific was again the leader, advancing 3⅝ points to 140⅝.

Amalgamated was strong, touching 90 again, and closing at 89½, a net gain of 1⅝ points. Smelters were firm, gaining 2 points to 119⅝. St. Paul gained 1¾ to 133½, Northern Pacific 2½ to 130, Great Northern preferred 2 to 133¼, Reading 1⅝ to 104, Southern Pacific 2 to 80⅛, Brooklyn Rapid Transit, 1⅜ to 58¾, Canadian Pacific 1¼ to 176, Steel common ¼ to 37¼, and Steel preferred ½ to 100⅛. The closing was strong, with prices near their highest for the day.

Boston Sales 13,361.

In the Boston market the trading yesterday brought out 13,361 shares, a small number, but about proportionately equal to the full days' trading of previous sessions during the week. The total sales, however, were largely made up of transactions in a few specialties. Otherwise it was a Summer half holiday market.

There was an absence of selling pressure, the chief reason being that the shorts were buying for the day here as in New York. Most of the copper issues showed advances. Amalgamated was the only active issue, with sales of 4,009 shares.

Among the near-active stocks were Old Dominion, Franklin, Balaklala and North Butte. The dulness in other stocks was illustrated by the total sales of only 256 shares of Copper Range, as compared with some 2,500 shares on other days.

Trinity was inconspicuous, with 272 shares. North Butte, the active and strong feature of the entire week, gained 1½ points to 84⅝. On three successive days during the week it gained 2 points in each session. Centennial gained 1 point to 31 yesterday, Franklin 1 to 15½, Mohawk 1½ to 83½, Old Dominion 2¼ to 40, Osceola 3 to 131 and Tamarack 3 to 110. Among the few weak stocks were losses of 3 points in Calumet & Arizona and 2 points in Calumet & Hecla. The market was most nearly active and strong near the close.

ROUT COPPER RING IN RAID ON PRICES

Calumet Forces Amalgamated and United Metals to Make Cut of Three Cents.

Struggling against the inevitable, protesting to the last in [illegible] of satisfying the greed which has [illegible] treasury of the Amalgamated Copper Company with many millions of [illegible] the United Metals Selling [illegible] has joined the other companies in [illegible] the price of the red metal.

This reduction in price was the chief event of the week in [illegible] and the most important [illegible] for months in copperdom, one that [illegible] awaited through vexatious delays in the hope of its breaking the deadlock that had endured for weeks in the [illegible] metal market. This deadlock has been broken, and, incidentally, the Amalgamated officials, such as Henry H. Rogers and William Rockefeller, who control the United Metals Selling Company, have had to swallow a bitter pill.

Bitter Pill for Trust

The dose of lower [illegible] and a consequent loss of [illegible] for the Amalgamated Company was [illegible] down the throat of the [illegible]. For once that gigantic combination found itself powerless to dictate the course of copper affairs. This situation was caused by two events—an increase in [illegible] copper production, with a consequent decrease in the price for the metal [illegible] American agencies, and the [illegible] of a Boston company, the Calumet & Hecla, in recognizing the status of the metal market and making a radical [illegible] of three cents per pound in the price of its own brand of the metal.

Phelps Dodge & Co. of New York who sell large amounts of [illegible] at home and abroad also reduced [illegible] and the United Metals Selling Company had, perforce, to follow suit.

Intended to Hold Prices.

An official of United Metals states that the cut was needless; that as much copper could have been sold at 25 cents per pound, the former price, as at 22 cents, the new price. He practically states that if other companies had not reduced the price his company would not have done so. In other words the company which sells more than half of the country's output of copper would have arbitrarily maintained the old price had it been able to, thereby squeezing the consumers out of the extra profits, just as the Sunday American a few weeks ago declared that the Copper Trust was endeavoring to do.

The Calumet & Hecla, the biggest independent producer, has reduced the expensive Lake brand from 25 cents to 23 cents, and the price of electrolytic copper has been reduced from 25 to 22 cents.

CAMBRIDGE WILL SOON RIVAL "SPOTLESS TOWN"

Citizens Respond to Mayor's Call and Help to Keep Streets Clean.

From the Mayor, from the Superintendent of Streets and from the Police Department the orders have gone forth to the people of Cambridge that the city must be cleaned up, and that they must [illegible] and help. Cambridge Old Home Week is coming.

The dust is flying, the orders are out, and the city ordinance against [illegible] streets and alleys, a dead letter for so long, has been revived and will be enforced.

The citizens of the University city are hustling, and the disgraceful condition of thoroughfares will soon be a thing of the past.

For many months the residents of some portions of the city distributed their garbage and rubbish in the easiest possible way—they just threw it out doors and let the wind do the rest. It [illegible] fatted, and the more [illegible] people were offended. They complained long and bitterly; they wrote sarcastic notes to the officials of the city government and then came the awakening.

The surface of many streets long covered with debris is at last visible. [illegible] [illegible] have started the [illegible].

The reform has started with great earnestness and promises to be lasting, for with [illegible] streets and [illegible] the citizens are awake to a sense of public [illegible]. Not only are the streets cleaned but every precaution is being taken against a return of the old state. Hand [illegible] are [illegible]. Receptacles for refuse are being [illegible] and what is more important [illegible] used.

Some Rules Adopted by Cambridge Citizens

Let the dust fly.
Clean your sidewalks and alleys.
Get busy with your brooms.
No dirt. No refuse.

ROCKEFELLER A FLUENT TALKER ON THE GOLF LINKS

Cleveland, O., July 13. That John D. Rockefeller is a more fluent conversationalist on the golf links than on the witness stand became certain to-night when there was made public a copy of a stenographic report of the utterances of the richest man in the world during one afternoon's play at the National Golf Tournament when he followed H. Chandler Egan over the course.

His conversation reported verbatim was as follows:

"I have long been a devotee of the game of golf. I thoroughly believe there is no sport in existence which does so much to develop in man his best traits of character. It brings out all that is good in him and kills off the bad. It promotes right living, and after all that is the one thing we must all work to bring about.

"Egan is in perfect form. Look at that splendid drive from the second tee. There it goes on to the green, only a few feet from the flag. Fine work! Did you see how easy he made his swing? Not a bit of waste effort; the carry through was splendid and this is what gives him the distance. He has caution in every shot that he makes. He plans just what he expects to do and then he has nerve and the skill to make his plan successful.

"Egan has remarkable judgment as [illegible] direction. See that shot, [illegible] It was a perfect approach [illegible] as well as anyone I have ever seen play. He has a difficult putt [illegible]. It will be too bad if he misses.

"[illegible] that was magnificent! He has [illegible] twenty feet from the [illegible]. There, he has missed a three foot putt [illegible] two inches. But that was not lack of skill. He was unfortunate.

"[illegible] a beautiful drive. See that [illegible] the green or two. He has a ten-foot [illegible] to beat bogey. Hurrah! he made it. That was great. You do not know how pleased I am."

TO FORM BAY STATE HIBERNIAN DIVISION

Plan to Place Uniformed Rank of Massachusetts on a Military Basis.

MEET IN BOSTON MONDAY

Hibernians of Massachusetts are actively engaged in building up a strong military branch of the organization. At the present time there are numerous companies connected with divisions of the order in practically every city and town in the State. These detached bodies generally participate in drills and parades held under the auspices of the order on different occasions.

At the last national convention of the order held in Fall River, it was voted to strengthen and enlarge the scope of the movement to have these separate companies assembled into regiments. With that end in view Colonel John McCarthy, of Fall River was appointed by National President Matthew J. Cummings to exercise general supervision over military affairs. Since his induction into office Colonel McCarthy has spared neither time nor expense in carrying to ultimate success the wishes of the delegates at the [illegible] annual gathering.

There are now two regiments of Hibernians in Massachusetts. Colonel John O'Leary of Boston heads one and Colonel McCarthy of Fall River commands the [illegible]. Both number two thousand men, all of whom are expert in the manual of arms. Drills are held weekly by the companies which make up these two regiments.

Worcester has one of the finest companies in the State. In that locality it is expected that a regiment will be formed.

On Monday evening there will be a meeting of the officers of all military companies in the headquarters of the First Hibernian Regiment. Colonel John O'Leary will preside. At this meeting action will be taken relative to admitting all separate commands into regiments and brigading the same. It is possibe that action will also be taken on the matter of petitioning the next Legislature to enact a bill into law which will permit of the carrying of arms in the streets when on parade.

GOLDEN WEDDING OF POLISH COUPLE

North Attleboro, July 13.—For the first time in the history of this town a Polish couple will Monday celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They are Mr. and Mrs. Clemence Samarzewski, of No. 4 Ornes street, who have been residents of the town for twenty five years. They will attend a high mass in honor of the event at St. Mary's Church at 9 o'clock and during the day will receive friends at their home.

AN EXTRAORDINARY MIDSUMMER OFFER.

High-Grade Securities in Combination at a Price to Attract Every Investor

Men whose idea of investments is that they are to be found on the gambler-manipulated Stock Exchange will tell you that the past week possessed something of dullness—that it was hard to sell securities—that the public is not buying these days—thus again proving that Wall Street and State Street are not reliable barometers of the actual state of trade.

If any argument had been needed to prove that the investors of America welcome an opportunity to secure an especially good and profitable investment, it would have been found, during the week just past, in the tremendous inflow of mail into my office following my announcement, first made a week ago today, of my remarkable midsummer combination offering of high-grade securities at an especially low price.

It is not once in a year that the investor finds an opportunity to secure stocks whose regular selling prices aggregate $457.50 for $350, yet that is my offer, made last week and still in force, the entire allotment of shares not yet having been exhausted.

Large numbers of orders for the securities that go to form this group which I am offering at the extraordinary figure of 23½ per cent. below the price at which the stocks in the combination find a ready separate sale, have been received by me daily. This is not more than I expected—I have had experience with the good sense and business sanity of American investors before—but it would prove a most wonderful eye-opener for the man who confuses "investment" with "speculation," and looks to the places where the speculators congregate to learn whether or not there is investment activity.

The securities that I have combined to make up this attractive investment group are as follows

1 share of stock of the King-Crowther Corporation.
1 share of 8 per cent. cumulative fully-participating preferred stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company.
1 share of common stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company.
5 shares of stock of the Douglas Copper Company.
1 share of 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock of the Erie Preserving Company.
1 share of common stock of the Erie Preserving Company.

This collection of stocks, at $350 for the group, is one of the most attractive investment propositions ever presented to the public of America. I am inclined to think that it is but adequately fair to go a little further and say that this is the most extraordinary combination offer ever made by any financial house in this country.

There are several points to be especially remembered in considering this offer. The principal ones are these:

1. This combination possesses variety as well as value.

Three kinds of corporations are included in this group—oil, copper and industrial. And in each the offering is of the highest class.

There is but one larger operating oil company in the United States than the King-Crowther Corporation and that is the Standard Oil Company. The King-Crowther Corporation is actively operating in three states—Ohio, Indiana and Texas.

There is no copper company in the newer group of mines so well and favorably known as the Douglas Copper Company.

The Alton Manufacturing Company and the Erie Preserving Company are recognizedly at the top of the scale in their respective lines.

2. The corporations whose securities are included in this offer are already in highly successful operation.

The King-Crowther Corporation, in the three states in which it owns and controls vast properties, is now operating 608 oil wells. It has recently absorbed two important companies—the Norton Oil Company and the Burt Oil Company. Plans are under way for the acquisition of other well-known operating corporations. There is little doubt that the number of operating wells belonging to this company will be increased to 1000 within a year.

The Alton Manufacturing Company is the sole owner of the famous Alton "Inverto" lights, which are coming into such general use wherever gas is burned as an illuminant. It has a large factory in Greenwich street, New York city, where the lights are manufactured. It owns, clear of all incumbrance, the large glass works at Sandwich, Mass., which is running busily, with orders ahead for a great quantity of glassware of all grades and kinds. It has contracted with large sales companies for the exploitation and sale of its product.

The Erie Preserving Company has been established for 34 years, and is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the United States. It preserves and packs over 100 varieties of fruits, vegetables and table delicacies. It operates five large plants—nearly a hundred buildings in all—in five towns in Western New York state. It sold 20,000,000 packages of its product last year, and this season the orders thus far received are 50 per cent. higher than at this time last year.

The Douglas Copper Company, at its mines in Sonora, Mexico, has already blocked out $14,000,000 worth of copper. The first unit of a 1,000-ton custom smelter is nearly finished. By Autumn the company will be selling its product.

3. The investor under this offer is sure of approximately 7 per cent. if dividends are never increased—a highly improbable supposition. As a matter of fact, I believe, after a year, he will receive at least 10 per cent.

The King-Crowther Corporation is now paying quarterly dividends of 2 per cent.—8 per cent. a year. It is accumulating a comfortable surplus. Its earnings are approximately 12 per cent. With the growth now in progress and contemplation I believe I am well within the bounds of conservatism in predicting that within less than two years this corporation will pay annual dividends aggregating at least 12 per cent.

The Alton Manufacturing Company is paying dividends of 8 per cent. a year upon its preferred stock. The condition of the business guarantees that this will continue. Furthermore, as president of the Alton Manufacturing Company and the largest holder of its common stock—from which I myself must look for my returns upon the large amount of money I invested to purchase control of the company—I can say that I confidently expect the corporation will pay a substantial dividend upon its common stock late this year or early in 1908.

The Erie Preserving Company has always paid semi-annual dividends of 3½ per cent.—7 per cent. a year—upon its preferred stock. The investor in this combination is as certain to receive his $7 a year for each share of preferred stock in the Erie Preserving Company as though he had invested his money in a high-grade railroad or industrial bond. In fact, to appreciate the value of this stock it is necessary to compare it with a bond, for the Erie Preserving Company has no bonded indebtedness, and every share of preferred stock is as much a lien upon the assets of the corporation as a first mortgage bond would be.

The Douglas Copper Company has not as yet paid a dividend. Notwithstanding this, the price of its shares—par value $5—has increased in the open market to $10.50, at which price I recently sold 20,000 shares. This is due to the highly advanced workings of the mine, the $14,000,000 worth of copper already blocked out, the nearly finished smelter, and the new branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad, which runs to Fundicion, near the mine. Competent engineers have said they expect the Douglas Copper Company to pay a dividend of 60 per cent. on the par value of the stock during the first year of operation—and the smelter is expected to be in operation before the coming winter.

This, then, is the offer that I am making, under limited conditions and for a strictly limited time, to investors:

I offer you a share of stock of the King-Crowther Corporation, which has a par value of $100, is readily selling at par, upon which a dividend of 8 per cent. is now being paid, and upon which I believe you will receive a dividend of 12 per cent. within two years.

I offer you a share of the 8 per cent. preferred stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company, which is selling at par, $100, upon which a dividend of 8 per cent. is being paid.

I offer you a share of the 7 per cent. preferred stock of the Erie Preserving Company, par value $100, selling readily at par, and upon which the fixed dividend of 3½ per cent. is being paid every six months.

I offer you five shares of stock of the Douglas Copper Company, par value $5 a share, now selling for $10.50 a share, and upon which engineers expect to see a 60 per cent. dividend.

I offer you a share of common stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company, par value $100, easily selling at $36, upon which I expect to see a substantial dividend declared within less than a year.

I offer you a share of common stock of the Erie Preserving Company, par value $100, selling readily at $59, and upon which dividends are now being earned.

The par value of this stock aggregates $525.

The present selling price of this stock aggregates $457.50.

IN THE PRESENT COMBINATION I OFFER THIS STOCK FOR $350.

There are men who propose economic reforms—and their methods lead the citizen from one band of ravaging politicians into the hands of another. There are doctors who suggest cures—and their recipes prove to be nostrums. There are financiers who advocate the gaining of riches—and adoption of their advice means only loss, ruin and the acquirement of the gambling habit. For six years I have been a financial agent, preaching a new gospel of honest returns on money invested, with the eyes of the world upon me, sharply outlined in the limelight of public attention. My record is in the hands of the world. I have practiced what I preached. I have kept my word. I have carefully, conservatively and sanely refrained from making one unconsidered prediction, one exaggerated prophecy, one irresponsible promise. In a word, I have proven the virtue of the gospel I have preached. I prove it today, for I do not merely say, "You should receive at least 7 per cent. from your investments," but I produce and present to the investors of America an opportunity for even better returns than that.—C. F. KING.

Upon the preferred stock of the Alton Manufacturing Company a quarterly dividend of $2 will be paid on August 15.

Upon the preferred stock of the Erie Preserving Company a semi-annual dividend of $3.50 will be paid on September 1.

Upon the stock of the King-Crowther Corporation a quarterly dividend of $2 will be paid on September 15.

Purchasers of this group under this offer will be entitled to the dividends now accrued upon these stocks.

Note carefully these two conditions:

First—I reserve the right to withdraw this offer without notice to anyone.

Second—No one person will be allowed to purchase more than ten of these groups under this offer. In other words, no single order will be received for more than $3500.

If you have stocks or bonds of value but of less attractiveness than those in this group—if you have securities, in other words, which pay you less than 8 or 10 per cent.—which you would like to exchange for one or more of these groups, you may do so by sending your securities to my office, with instructions to sell, whereupon I will guarantee to secure for you the highest market quotation, and will apply the gross proceeds, without any deduction for brokerage or other charges, to the purchase for you of groups of the securities heretofore enumerated under this special midsummer combination offer.

IN MY SIX YEARS OF ACTIVITY AS A FINANCIAL AGENT I HAVE NEVER MADE A MORE ATTRACTIVE OFFER. MY EXPERIENCE TEACHES ME THAT IT IS NOT WITHIN THE RANGE OF HUMAN PROBABILITY THAT THE LIMITED ALLOTMENT OF SECURITIES I HAVE AT MY DISPOSAL WILL LAST LONG.

Address all communications to me personally and make all remittances payable to my order.

DR. LONG RETURNS TO HIS ATTACK ON ROOSEVELT

Nature Writer Accuses President of Asking Other Naturalists to "Take Shot" at Him.

Stamford, Ct., July 13.—In an interview which he gave to-day, Dr. William J. Long, who was accused by President Roosevelt of being a nature fakir, charges the President with inducing other naturalists to attack him, and of being responsible for a campaign against him which he characterizes as "pure, unadulterated sham."

"This seems even more cowardly and deplorable than his original attack," declared Dr. Long.

"The President gives out publicly that I am 'too small game to shoot at twice.' Meanwhile he is privately writing to other naturalists, asking them, with all the subtle influence of Presidential favor, to take shots at the small game which he missed, and which, instead of running away, began most uncomfortably to shoot back."

Had Read Burroughs.

Dr. Long's latest expression of opinion on the President and his methods in the "nature fakir" controversy was given after he had read an article by John Burroughs, a naturalist, in the current issue of The Outlook, entitled "President Roosevelt, Nature Lover and Observer."

It is very complimentary to President Roosevelt, and, following on the heels of Mr. Burroughs' visit to the President, is regarded as significant by Dr. Long and his friends. Last week Ernest Ingersoll, a naturalist of some reputation, went over to Oyster Bay, on the President's invitation. A day or two later he came out with a letter attacking Dr. Long.

"When that appeared," said Dr. Long, "I did a little investigating and discovered that the President, seeing that he has put his foot on it, is endeavoring to divert attention from himself by 'sicking on' the other nature-writers to an attack on me. I know of letters the President has written to nature-writers asking them to attack me.

Roosevelt Greatly Mistaken.

"Mr. Roosevelt is at the bottom of that whole flattering article. Read for yourself and see with what infinite carelessness he has arranged the details, so that his flattering clerk would fall over every significant trifle from the little bird to the deer's tail and the bear's skin. It is simply a repetition of his first alleged 'interview,' in which he attacked me, and proclaimed himself the world's authority on game animals.

"Instead of being the world's authority, he was known to be absolutely mistaken in his dogmatic opinion; and, instead of being a great naturalist, he was shown, from his own books, to be chiefly a game-killer, with a frightful record of slaughter.

"This seems to me even more cowardly and deplorable than his original attack. I met the issue squarely, furnished the proof demanded, and offered much more if he would only treat it honestly or give it any kind of a square deal. Instead of meeting the real issue of truth and honor like a man he retires behind the official silence.

Inspired by Jealousy.

"As for the article of Mr. Borroughs, I need only to point out two things: first, he is praising his influential friend; and, second, he is attacking another man of whom he is intensely jealous. That is a combination to make a special pleader, whose hands are tied and who cannot be considered seriously.

HEARST WINS BIG VICTORY IN FIGHT UPON MONOPOLY

United States for the Southern District of New York to have the merger declared illegal. Judge Holt sustains his contention.

In his opinion he sets forth the following facts:

The object of this suit is to obtain an adjudication declaring that the transfer of certain stock of the defendant, the Metropolitan Securities Company, to the defendant, the Interborough Metropolitan Company was illegal and void, and setting aside such transfer.

Facts Alleged in Bill.

The substantial facts alleged in the bill, or stated in the exhibits annexed to it, are as follows:

"The complainant, Burrows, is a citizen of Illinois, residing at Chicago, and is the owner of one thousand four hundred shares of the stock of the Metropolitan Securities Company. He sues in behalf of himself and of any other stockholders who may come in and contribute to the expense of the suit. Prior to the organization of the defendant the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, the defendant, the Interborough Rapid Transit Company was engaged in the maintenance and operation of the underground railway, commonly called the Subway in the city of New York. Prior to January, 1903, the Manhattan Railway Company was engaged in the maintenance and operation of the elevated railways in the city of New York, and in January, 1903, leased its entire railroad property to the said Interborough Rapid Transit Company, which has since operated said elevated roads.

"Prior to February, 1902, the defendant, the Metropolitan Street Railway Company became, by merger, lease, purchase of stock or other means, in control of a large number of the street surface railways in the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. In February, 1902, the defendant, the New York City Railway, a corporation originally organized under the name of the Inter-Urban Street Railway Company, became the lessee of the railroads of the Metropolitan Securities Company. Thereafter the Metropolitan Securities Company was organized and became the owner of all the stock of the New York City Railway Company.

Got Control of Lines.

"As a result of these operations in December, 1905, the Interborough Rapid Transit Company controlled and was operating the subway and the elevated railroads, and the Manhattan Securities Company had all the stock of the New York City Railway Company, which controlled and was operating all the street railways in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. The total length of such street surface roads is about 512 miles.

"The defendant, August Belmont, and his business associates controlled the management and business policy of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company. The defendant, Thomas F. Ryan, and his associate stockholders owned or controlled a majority of the stock of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company and the Metropolitan Securities Company. Under these circumstances Messrs. Belmont and Ryan, each in behalf of his respective corporations entered into agreement to effect a combination and merger of all of said railroads.

How Stock Was Juggled.

"For that purpose they caused to be organized in January, 1906, the defendant, the Interborough Metropolitan Company, with $55,000,000 of preferred stock, $100,000,000 of common stock, and the power to issue $70,000,000 of the collateral trust gold bonds. Thereupon the Interborough Metropolitan Company in January, 1906, entered into an agreement with the defendant, Belmont, to purchase from said Belmont all the capital stock of said Interborough Rapid Transit Company, said Metropolitan Street Railway Company and said Metropolitan Securities Company, or so much thereof as said Belmont might acquire. Thereafter, said Belmont acquired and transferred to the Interborough Metropolitan Company about 96 per cent. of the stock of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, about 81 per cent. of the stock of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, and about 96 per cent. of the stock of the Metropolitan Securities Company. The total capitalization of said three companies was $117,000,000, as against the total issue of stock and bonds of the new company of $225,000,000.

Created Monopoly.

"In exchange for the stock of said three companies the Interborough Metropolitan Company issued its own securities in the following proportions: For each share of stock of the Interborough Railway Transit Company $200 par value of bonds, and $99 par value of common stock for each share of stock of Metropolitan Street Railway Company $100, par value of preferred stock, and 55 par value of common stock; and for each share of stock of the Metropolitan Securities Company $75 per share (paid up), $93.50 par value of common stock. The result of these transfers of the stock of said three companies to the Interborough Metropolitan Company was to destroy competition and create a monopoly in the business of transportation of passengers in the city of New York, and was illegal and void as being in violation of Section 7 of the Stock Corporations Law of New York, and of Section 168 of the Penal Code of New York.

"It is also asserted that the complainant is precluded from maintaining this action by his delay in bringing this suit. The Interborough-Metropolitan Company was organized in February, 1906. An application was made to the attorney-general of New York to begin an action in the name of the State to declare the proposed combination illegal. Naturally and properly, individual stockholders would await the result of such an application before suing themselves. The attorney-general denied the application and delivered a written opinion which is dated March 1, 1906.

Disagrees with Mayer.

"Whether this suit was begun before the attorney-general's decision was announced, or whether his opinion was written after such announcement, I am not informed, but in any point of view, I do not think that the complainant was guilty of any laches in beginning his action which would deprive him of the right to prosecute this suit.

"I should, perhaps, add that I have read the opinion of the Attorney-General. With entire respect for that opinion I am not able to concur with it.

"My conclusion is that each of the demurrers should be overruled with leave to the defendants to answer within thirty days upon payment of costs."

Supplemental to furnishing Mr. Burrows with evidence and a legal opinion, Mr. Hearst, as soon as there was a change of State administrations and a new Attorney-General, renewed his petition that the merger be attacked as a monopoly operating in defiance of the law.

Follows Hearst Points.

It was as a result of this application of the date of March 16 of the present year, that Attorney-General Jackson secured from Justice Platzek of the Supreme Court an order compelling the merger to show cause why suits should not be commenced to annul the charter as a corporation monopoly against the laws of the State.

The complaint of the Attorney-General on behalf of the people in his application to Justice Platzek follows word for word the Hearst application.

In his application, which Attorney-General Jackson utilizes, Mr. Hearst declares the merger to be a monopoly distinctly in violation of the law of the State.

He cites Section 7 of the stock corporation law, which says:

> "No domestic stock corporation shall combine with any other corporation or person for the creation of a monopoly for the unlawful restraint of trade or for the prevention of competition in any necessity of life."

Supplemental Section 168 of the penal code says:

> "If two or more persons conspire to commit any act injurious to public health or to trade or to commerce, they are guilty of a misdemeanor."

What Holt Seeks.

On these grounds only is such a merger prohibited by the civil statutes, but also punishable under the penal code.

Mr. Hearst applied to the Attorney-General to start suit to annul the charter of the merger corporation. Right on the heels of the decision of Justice Holt the Attorney-General has commenced his action. The purpose of the proceeding the Attorney-General declares to be:

To have the court vacate the charter of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company.

To decree that the acquisition by the Interborough-Metropolitan of the stocks of the subsidiary companies was in violation of the law.

To decree the transfer of the stock of the Metropolitan Securities Company as null and void.

To forever enjoin all the officers, directors and employes of the Metropolitan-Interborough from directly or indirectly maintaining the monopoly.

Send also name and address of dealer from whom milk was purchased. A report will be sent you at once on the purity of the milk. If the milk is found to be impure, the dealer will be at once war and if he still continues to sell impure milk he will b tested.—Notice to milk consumers in Cambrid CHIEF MILK INSPECTOR DR. SPARRO

Dr. Ernest H. Sparrow
CHIEF MILK INSPECTOR

STAMPING OUT SALE OF POISONED MILK

Cambridge Officials Determined to Check Mortality Among Little Ones.

WARNING TO THE PUBLIC

The city government of Cambridge has begun a war against milk dealers who kill babies by means of impure milk. In this crusade the officials have the backing of the courts and the police. Judge Almy, in the Cambridge District Court, fined Milk Dealer Holt $150 for selling watered milk, and declared:

"A man who is guilty of selling impure or watered milk, which is intended for the use of babies, is guilty of manslaughter."

Every milk dealer who sells milk in Cambridge must now come forward and pass an examination for a new license. By this means it is hoped that the criminal dealers who sell impure or watered milk may be driven out of business.

Establish Milk Stations.

Directions are being sent throughout the city instructing mothers how to care for their infants. Public milk stations have been opened where absolutely pure milk may be obtained. Enough milk to feed an infant for a day is sold for eight cents. Many lives were saved last Summer by crusade:

Here are some of the directions sent out by the Milk Commission during the present crusade.

> In case you suspect the quality of the milk supplied by your dealer, send a sample to the Cambridge City Hall, to the milk inspector's office. It will be tested at once, free, and a report furnished you of its purity. In case it is found not up to standard, the dealer will be warned, and in case he still continues to supply impure milk, he will be arrested.
>
> Don't feed the baby bananas, candy, popcorn, sugar or anything else but milk, unless told to do so by your physician.
>
> Give it pure air day and night.
>
> Give it no food but mother's milk, milk from the bottle, or food directed by physician.
>
> Whenever it cries or is fretful, do not offer it food, but give it water.
>
> Be sure that it gets enough sleep, two naps during the day, at least.
>
> Do not put too much clothing on it.
>
> Bathe it in a tub every day.
>
> Don't handle it; let it alone.

Vigorous measures have been put into effect by Dr. Ernest H. Sparrow, the recently appointed chief milk inspector.

Now Getting Good Milk.

"The people in Cambridge are now getting a good quality of milk and it is my intention to keep that standard high.

"We follow milk peddlers constantly and take specimens of their wares. Whenever we find anything wrong we notify the dealer at once and insist that the defect be remedied. If the dealer does not act we take him into court."

In addition to the establishment of milk stations where milk from certified dairies, modified for the use of babies, is on sale so cheaply that one day's milk costs only 8 cents, Cambridge issues free a helpful circular entitled "How to Take Care of Babies During Hot Weather."

This pamphlet is filled with information that is helpful to mothers.

The Cambridge Milk Commission, which is maintained by an appropriation by the City Council, sold last year more than 80,000 bottles of pure milk. The parents of 215 babies profited by the distribution.

Infant Mortality Reduced.

The records of the commission show that the inauguration of the work of the commission reduced the mortality from intestinal complaints 18 per cent. from the average of the five years preceding the beginning of the work.

Although the traffic in milk had been pretty well scrutinized in the past, this year further regulations were made.

In order that all the unfit dealers might be weeded out, the following notice was sent recently to 20 milk peddlers and 480 milk dealers in Cambridge:

> "No person shall sell milk in a store or market place in the city of Cambridge without first obtaining a license from the Board of Health under the regulations of the board and such conditions as the board may impose. Such license to be revoked if the licensee fails to comply with the conditions of the license or said regulations of the Board of Health."

This notice means that all those persons that deal in milk in Cambridge will have to be relicensed.

To Weed Out Offenders.

In passing upon their applications it will be possible for the authorities to weed out those dealers in whom no confidence is felt or against whom complaints have been made with justice.

Any mother in Cambridge that wants pure milk for her baby may get it by communicating with the Cambridge School for Nurses at No. 1,000 Massachusetts avenue.

Milk will then be furnished from some one of the following public stations:

The Cambridge School for Nurses.
The Margaret Fuller Home, at No. 72 Cherry street.
The Public Library Branch in Fourth street, East Cambridge.
The Cambridge Field Shelter.
The Rindge Field Shelter.

The Cambridge regulations for the sale and care of milk are very rigid.

A copy of the regulations has been sent to every milk pedler and dealer.

These regulations provide for the most careful storage of milk and the utmost cleanliness in its selling.

Other cities and towns throughout New England are looking toward Cambridge for pointers as to the best method of dealing with the milk industries, and babies in other cities and towns will profit by the conditions in Cambridge, which have already proved to be of such value to the babies that have the felicity to dwell in that city.

PURE, FRESH MILK FOR SICK AND POOR SOMERVILLE PLAN

A philanthropic movement, which has for its object the furnishing of pure, fresh milk to the sick and the children of the worthy poor, has been started in Somerville, where it is meeting with success.

Mayor Grimmons, Mrs. Helen F. Edleffson, John H. Dusseault, Miss Helen J. Sanborn, S. Newton Cutler and Mrs. Beulah Hanscom have contributed funds to the new movement.

Mrs. Barbara Galpin is in charge of the work.

The idea was sugested by Dr. J. E. Richardson, inspector of milk in Somerville.

Later the work is to be placed in the hands of an association, officers of which are to be elected soon.

CATHOLICS TO HOLD OLD HOME FETES

Two big Catholic churches of Cambridge are planning for lawn parties in aid of their building funds. St. Paul's Church is to hold a field day on Kirkland street Saturday afternoon and evening, July 27. Father John Ryan, pastor of the church, and a large committee are working to make the affair a success.

Father John A. Crowe, pastor of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Cambridgeport, announces that the annual lawn party of the parish will be held on the Erie street grounds, August 1, 2 and 3. Father Crowe is an enthusiastic worker for Old Home Week, and in arranging for the annual lawn party of the church included the last three days of the week for the affair.

CAMBRIDGE PASTOR CHANGES HIS FAITH

North Cambridge people have not yet recovered from the surprise given them early in the week by Rev. William B. Eddy, who resigned from the pastorate of the Third Universalist Church.

Early last week Mr. Eddy gave out a statement including his reasons for his sudden and unexpected resignation. Rumors of friction were denied by both pastor and congregation.

When his resignation was read by a substitute Mr. Eddy was out of town.

Upon his return he stated he would give out his reasons at a later date. Mr. Eddy's resignation took effect last Sunday and on Wednesday, before leaving town, he announced that he had withdrawn from the Universalist denomination and had entered the Protestant Episcopal church, being a candidate for holy orders. He has accepted a position at Grace Church, New York, of which Rev. W. R. Huntington, D. D., is rector. Mr. Eddy will enter upon his duties in October.

One cause of the break between pastor and people is the fact that two months ago Mr. Eddy asked for an increase in salary, which was refused.
